"SILENT" HANLEY'S STORY

Republican Buck Fever
One Happy Face
Queer 100,000,000
A Ship in Danger

—By Arthur Brisbane—

(Copyright, 1920.)

A man unaccustomed to big game went out looking for moose. He found one, calmly grazing, couldn't believe his eyes, and forgot to shoot. That is "buck fever." It afflicts some Republicans. They seem not to know that they are gazing now on the largest Republican national victory that will be seen in this country for many a year.

Buck fever, which comes when you actually see the thing you want, is not uncommon in politics. Remember the famous case of Roosevelt in 1904. Face to face with overwhelming victory, Roosevelt became panicky, wired E. H. Harriman for a contribution, and got from Harriman two hundred and fifty thousand dollars "to help carry New York State."

In a few days all Republicans knew that panic was foolish.

A bigger victory than Roosevelt's will come to Senator Harding next Tuesday. He knows it, but many of his Republican friends don't. To warm their "cold feet" let them go hunting for a man willing to say he is going to vote for Cox.

Mr. Creel's always happy face was 100 per cent. happier than usual when he left the White House yesterday—so the reporters thought. He pressed his right arm against something in his inside pocket and the reporters said, "Ha! He has the papers."

Mr. Creel, fresh from Mexico, thinks this country should recognize Huerta. Watch for the official announcement that this government has recognized Mexico. The announcement might come today—just in time to add a few votes to the Harding landslide.

How interesting, if the United States, on the eve of election, should recognize President De La Huerta, who sits in the chair of his predecessor, Carranza, an old man, murdered in typical and cowardly fashion to make room for the present incumbent.

What a fine advertisement it would be for the blessed League of Nations to recognize the principle of election by murder!

How soon will a nation of a hundred millions learn to take a national election as earnestly as the average citizen takes the selection of his Winter overcoat or his Spring hat?

The gigantic victory that awaits Mr. Harding is due to the fact that, fortunately, the League of Nations nightmare has stood out as conspicuous as a mountain on a flat plain.

There are a hundred other reasons why the kind of government now ruling in Washington should be abolished. But these have scarcely been noticed. People do not realize what a continuation of this kind of government would have meant in a year or two more.

The "Wiggle and Wobble" slogan of the Republicans is a feeble description of the conditions that have made it almost impossible to find, north of the Mason and Dixon line, a man that will tell you he intends to vote to continue the present kind of government.

Difficulties are ahead, the danger of industrial depression, the certainty of devastating competition from Europe. And nothing is planned.

The President is not to be blamed, for he is a sick man. The sympathy of the whole nation is with him. Everyone realizes that his nervous strength was exhausted in the unequal struggle against the avaricious cunning of European statesmen in which the one man succumbed.

The country is drifting without management. It is like a ship rolling in the sea, with masts broken and rudder gone. Odd comparison, but the only one that fits. Can you mention any one policy or plan of this government?

No man with authority to speak for the government has anything to say about the pressing problems, hard times, lack of employment and financial panic, to put matters plainly.

There is plenty of thought at Washington about Mesopotamia, many schemes for interfering permanently with Russia's right to govern herself, many preposterous dreams of putting the benevolent will of one American invalid in place of the passions, jealousies, greediness and race hatreds that rule Europe, and that will last until the destructive fire has burned itself out.

This country needs an American government, for America, and needs it badly. It will make a change at least next Tuesday, and may the kind providence that has taken care of the United States, on the old plan, for the last hundred and forty years, supply during the next four years the government that the country needs. An American, United States government, for plain people interested in the United States.

TROLLEY MEN IN REVOLT

Eastern Massachusetts Employes to Refuse to Obey One-Man Car Order

With more than 1,000 employes of the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway laid off and thousands of other carmen in open revolt because of the introduction of one-man cars, this State again faces a trolley strike of far-reaching proportions.

The situation, now serious threatens to become acute on Sunday, when Fall River carmen state they will refuse to operate converted one-man cars assigned them on new runs according to seniority.

Officials of the Eastern Massachusetts and the Fall River company are adamant in their determination to maintain this type of trolley, and William D. Mahon, national president of the union carmen, has been called here.

Some time ago the wage conference board of the Bay State Carmen's Union sent a similar request to Detroit, the headquarters of the international. In this request it was pointed out that the men of that

Thousands at Mass for MacSwiney

Thousands of Irish sympathizers from all over Massachusetts crowded the Cathedral of the Holy Cross in Washington street today to assist in the solemn high mass of requiem for Lord Mayor MacSwiney, Joseph Murphy and Michael Fitzgerald, Irish hunger strikers.

The scene within the vast Cathedral was wonderfully impressive, as men and women bowed their heads in prayer, while the ancient chants of the church were intoned for the souls of the departed patriots.

Long before the hour set for the services the church was filled. Sixteen pews were reserved for officers of the different Irish organizations. Jerome O'Neil, chief usher, had charge of the seating of the mourners.

Among those present were former Mayor James M. Curley, United States District Attorney Daniel J. Gallagher, former City Collector John J. Curley, Edward F. McSweeney, Daniel J. Coakley, James P. Hayes, president of the Boston Council of the Friends of Irish Freedom; John J. Foley, president of the Central Council of Irish County Associations; Patrick J. MacSwiney Treated Savagely Declares Father Dominic

By International News Service.

Dublin, Oct. 29.—Charges that British soldiers and "Black and Tan" policemen at Holyhead treated members of the MacSwiney family with great brutality when they took possession of the body of Terence MacSwiney were made here today by the Rev. Father Dominic, former personal spiritual adviser to the Cork Lord Mayor.

The priest declared that the body was removed from the funeral train at Holyhead by force and that when members of the MacSwiney family and their friends objected they were brutally assaulted by the soldiers and policemen.

"One military officer particularly distinguished himself by savagely manhandling Mary MacSwiney," said the priest.

The Rev. Father Dominic was with Terence MacSwiney when he died in Brixton jail. He accompanied the body to Holyhead. When the soldiers and policemen forcibly took possession of the coffin at Holyhead and placed it

PETERS TO DISCHARGE OFFICIALS

Inspectors in West Roxbury Paving Work to Lose Jobs If Guilty

Mayor Peters today said inspectors of the Public Works Department would be summarily dealt with, if found guilty of charges of neglect of duty made against them by the Finance Commission.

"If these men have been guilty of neglect of duty in seeing that contracts are carried out, they will be summarily dealt with," said the Mayor.

The neglect of duty, according to the Finance Commission report, was in connection with the repaving of Centre street, West Roxbury, where it was said the Howe Contracting Company failed to live up to its $161,355 contract.

The commission charges that exceptionally poor paving mixture has been substituted for the kind named in the contract and that city officials have been grossly negligent or grossly incompetent.

Mayor Peters has personally inspected the work and said he was "disappointed and disgusted."

As one result of the alleged botching of the work it cannot possibly be finished before next Summer, although the contract calls for its completion Nov. 1.

The Finance Commission bases its report on an investigation made by its own chemist. He termed the paving mixture "one of the poorest he ever saw."

The report concludes: "We therefore recommend that Your Honor remove such city employes, of whatever rank, as had a duty to perform for the city under this contract and failed to perform it."

HOW WORLD LOOKS AFTER 25 YEARS

Patrick J. Hanley, known as "Silent Corkey," who was released this week from Charlestown prison after a sentence of twenty-five years, the last ten of which he had not spoken a word, today "told" his story to the Boston American. He denied that he has been on a "silence strike," declaring that he is unable to speak. He "told" his story in writing. In some respects it is one of the most remarkable stories told in Boston for a long time.

If you had been locked up in prison for the past twenty-five years, what do you suppose would make the greatest impression upon you as you entered the world again?

In the American office today a question like this was addressed to P. J. ("Corkey") Hanley, otherwise "Silent" Hanley, who completed a quarter of a century in Charlestown prison this week and who gets his second nickname because since 1912 no man living has heard him speak.

The reporter who asked "Corkey" for his most outstanding impressions received the surprise of his young life. What the newspaperman expected to have "Corkey" write upon the block of paper in front of him was something like: "Oh, automobiles, two moving pictures" and so on and so forth.

This is what was actually written by the man whose "sleep" behind the gray walls of Charlestown beats the record of Rip Van Winkle by five long years:

1—Women's dresses.
Sacrificed reduction out of the people.
3—Intelligence of the young generation.

IN PANTOMIME

After "Corkey" had written the first line he stood up and embellished the observation by pantomime. He pulled the left leg of his blue serge trousers almost up to the knee, from the pulled both legs together, signifying that skirts are also tight. Finally, he placed both hands on his hips, pulled up by a raised his eyes to heaven as if the sights had shocked him. Then he sat down and wrote:

"What incense of the hustle!"

About as youthful a chap of 56 as you are likely to find in the neighborhood of Hoboken, "Corkey" came to the American office from the South Station today—he had spent a day in New York—to ask if somebody would telephone to his married sister in one of the suburbs and say he would return as soon as a train could get him there. Meanwhile, he was ready to answer any question anybody wanted to fling him. He wrote down the single condition that no mention be made of his people or their address.

NO GRIEVANCE

The first thing "Corkey" wanted to do, apparently, was perforate the report that he went on a "strike" at Charlestown, because of some grievance. As to that, "Corkey" Hanley's first observation consisted of two words:

"Darn tall!"

Asked to elucidate the man who had been put away for twenty-five years wrote this:

"I was arrested in 1895 that I was taking the air in the yard, walking about on legs that do not stand straight. Gentry Hill, and there was a storm and a terrific wind was blowing. I stood there a while under an old chimney at the side of 'C. H.' (Cherry Hill). Bricks were blown down. My head was cut, and I have the scar to marks). I became unconscious. I have never been ABLE to speak since that moment. I wish I could! Dr. L. Vernon Briggs (a good man) and Dr. Ayer have tried time and time again—I think the word is—confession."

MUSCLES LIKE IRON.

Hanley is 5 feet 7½ inches tall. He is stoutly built, weighing about 190 pounds. His muscles are like iron. Men with whom he shook hands and who were likewise powerfully muscled—after the typewriting and such comment on his "fit condition."

"Say, why couldn't you do it?" wrote Corkey. "I never had a drink of liquor, never smoked, never chewed tobacco in my life."

Corkey wrote that he was glad to get from Cambridge and home in New York. The flowery, he said, is not what it used to be. "All I've been doing is motoring, going to the movies and eating. Everybody has treated me fine. Nothing too good for me!"

He was asked what he intended to do. His answer was: "No job in sight yet; nothing only think."

SEES SHORT DRESSES.

A young woman stenographer brought the visitor should be sore specific in her remarks about women's dresses. Corkey was willing. This time he wrote:

"When I went away there were no such short dresses, except that little girls of ten. And the thin silk stockings you all wear! Rank!"

Then there was a pantomime, to describe high heels, and Hanley sat down again and wrote four words more:

"As if on stilts!"

But he isn't a knocker. He has been just as much impressed, and very favorably, by the rising generation.

"Young people today appear to be much more intelligent than the young folks of twenty-five years ago. Their manners are good. They look clean. They've got it go-ahead look that only one in a thousand used to have. This is a great country!"

JEWS—EVEN IN LYNN.

Other great things impressed him, both in Boston and New York. For example:

"So many Jews—even in Lynn."

"So many Italians."

"Boston's North End is gone. In 1890 Fleet street was all Irish. There isn't any South End, either, as I used to know it. But everything appears to be better."

Hanley was asked how the prison time came to mind him for the long term as twenty-five years. He answered this as readily as any other question:

"I was arrested in Lynn on the charge of breaking and entering, and having already been brought in twice before, they put me in court as an habitual criminal. I don't believe any human being can say that a man of 21 is an habitual criminal on a record like that. They put me in for three times arrested and you are in it. It was republican in 1895, but the sentence wasn't repealed. I am the last of three h. e.'s to be released but here's a strange thing—I don't seem at all like twenty-five years to me now."

HIS GOOD APPEARANCE.

Hanley also was pleased to hear people remark on his good appearance.

"I've got to say that they have always used me well in Charlestown. The Warden is O. K., the Deputy Warden is O. K., and don't forget the Chaplain. All O. K! I had a soft job, too. Until I had to do my share about one hour's work, out in the yard."

WILL DO ANYTHING

There could be only one or two questions more before Hanley had to run for his train to the suburbs.

"What are going to do? What kind of a job do you want?"

"Anything—I don't care what; you name it. Anything I am—that will help me to lead a straight life. I guess I'm the only man recently discharged over there who did not have a job waiting for him."

Then Hanley left, encouragement to the visitor, and he was asked:

"Well, how does it look to you?"

And Corkey wrote:

"Just like being born again."

REBEL AGAINST ONE-MAN CARS

Eastern Massachusetts Trolley Employes to Refuse to Obey Company's Orders system were in open revolt against the one-man cars in some of the cities and towns through which the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Company operated.

NAY PLAN IS UNSAFE.

The matter was aggravated by the announcement of the officials of the road that they intended to operate converted double-truck one-man cars on the Lynn & Boston line, a possibility to this plan, declaring that that type of car was unsafe.

The new charge against the converted cars is made by the Union carmen's Paul Hicks, who was supported by John E. Dempsey, president of the Carmen's Union.

Manager A. Boardman of the railway company, however, denies that the cars endanger either the workmen or the public, and declared that the company assumed full liability for the operation of its cars, and that the officials are the only ones to judge what type of cars to run. On Sunday the men will be assigned to new runs and cars, according to which time those scheduled to take out the converted one-man cars will refuse to operate them.

DEPEND COMPANY

Frederick Cummings, public relations counsel for the Eastern States system, blames all the trouble today on the action of "less than half a dozen agitators who are persistent in their efforts to misrepresent the company to the public."

He said:

"We have approximately 150 one-man, double-truck cars operating on the system. Other street railway systems have installed these cars. There are about 4,000 of them being operated.

"We believe that all of the trouble today is the result of the efforts of a little band of less than a dozen agitators, who are persistent in their efforts to misrepresent the company to the public."

The one-man car is the outcome of the street railroad's evolution. It was an invention of the wide-awake printing business, the typewriter in commercial offices, or any other business.

"At the arbitration proceedings last month the men testified that they wished an additional car, which would mean a decrease in the number of employes. The employment of the one-man car by the company is the reply to that statement."

Sees Plot to Make the U. S. Pay for War

Paris, Oct. 29.—That Great Britain intends to adopt in connection with the Reparations Commission, the "war debts of the Allies in such a manner that the entire cost of the World War will inevitably fall upon the shoulders of the United States, is the general opinion on the Bourse in Paris, according to information," the leading French financial journal.

"Great Britain has not only informed Germany that she will not insist on the confiscatory sanctions prescribed in the Reparations clauses of the treaty of Versailles," says information, "but has announced that she will not require payment by France of the accumulated interest on war loans. The logical outcome of the complete repudiation of all debts owed under a common agreement among the Allies would be the wiping out of America as the world's creditor."

NEW PROTEST BY COALITION

Officials Called On to Refuse Public Property for Mac-Swiney Parade

The Irish Coalition, in letters to Mayor Peters, Adjutant-General Stevens, City Treasurer Murray and City Auditor Mitchell, has voiced a protest against the use of the property or equipment of the city or of the State for the MacSwiney funeral procession on Sunday.

In the letter to the Mayor, which is signed by Demarest Lloyd as president of the Coalition, the protest says that attention has been drawn to the plan for a "parade and demonstration in honor of the Lord Mayor of Cork, who passed away in Brixton prison as a result of self-inflicted starvation."

The letter continues with the statement that the taxpayers and citizens of Boston object to the use of public funds or property for such a demonstration, and adds that the principle involved is the same as in the case of the policeman recently sent Lloyd George, namely, "that public money shall not be used for private purposes or in alien propaganda."

Following, the letter says that the "organized Irish agitation, which is very largely devoted to giving offense to the government and people of a great and friendly nation, is offensive to the overwhelming majority of the citizens of Boston."

The letter to the Adjutant-General protests against the loaning of gun carriages for use in the parade, and asks that permission to use the carriages be refused.

upon a special boat for Cork the priest came to Ireland on a regular channel boat.

MacSwiney Funeral Held in Dublin Without Body

By International News Service.

London, Oct. 29.—Although the British government refused to allow the body of Terence MacSwiney to be taken to Dublin, on the ground it might lead to political disturbance, funeral services were held for the late Lord Mayor of Cork at the Irish capital and the day was observed as one of national mourning in Ireland.

After the body had been taken on board a small boat at Holyhead, Wales, for direct transportation to Cork under guard of a detachment of "Black and Tan" police and English soldiers, members of the MacSwiney family left for Kingston on an ordinary steamer.

The body of the late Lord Mayor will rest in state at Cork until the burial on Sunday.

Vigorous protests were made by members of the MacSwiney family at Holyhead over interference by the government in plans to take the body to Cork.

Mary MacSwiney, a sister, was quoted as saying:

"You will take this body to Cork only over my dead body," cried Mary MacSwiney when she was first informed of the government's order. Other members of the party tried to comfort Mary. As the coffin was carried upon the special boat she and her friends dropped to their knees sobbing and praying.

SISTER EJECTED.

"Black and Tan" police and a detachment of soldiers from the Cheshire regiment at Kingstown met the funeral train at the Welsh port. The commander of the police and military forces explained that he had received orders from the government to take the body direct to Cork. Mary MacSwiney, who had accompanied the body from London, sitting beside the coffin in a baggage car, began to protest. Finally the policemen forcibly ejected her and took charge of the coffin.

When news was received in this city of the action of the government officials members of the Irish Self-Determination League and other pro-Irish organizations announced that funeral services at Dublin would be carried out according to program as far as possible, despite the absence of the body. The Irish officer, pursuant to the policy adopted towards the funeral services in this city, said no attempt would be made to interfere with the funeral arrangements at Cork.

It was said the coffin might be draped with Sinn Fein flags while lying in state and that no restrictions would be placed upon the size of the funeral procession so long as the participants were not armed and did not march in military formation.

The magnitude and solemnity of the funeral procession in this city from St. George's Roman Catholic Cathedral, southward, to the Boston station, created a profound impression and was the subject of much comment in the newspapers today. Most of the newspapers printed pictures of the great cortege with its immense host of mourners.

AROUSES PRESS COMMENT.

The Daily Express commented upon the "wonderful" and "mighty" tolerance of London. "It was a scene that could happen anywhere else, with rebel soldiery marching without protest," said the Daily Express. "There was silent respect for the dead on every hand.

"Enough of our people lined the streets to demonstrate that there are those who refuse to recognize the right of the Lloyd George government to ill-use brutally and foully a small nation," said the Daily Herald, the organ of the Labor party.

"It was one of the most amazing examples of British tolerance that could possibly be conceived," said the Daily Graphic.

Advices from Cork said the city was "seething with indignation," but was quiet. Extensive military precautions were taken throughout Cork to cope with any disorders.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Crowley of Lynn, who acted as godfather and godmother at the christening of Joseph E. Murphy, one of the Irish martyrs, were among the mourners, and occupied one of the front pews.

Three draped caskets resting on gun caissons will be a feature of the funeral procession Sunday afternoon in honor of the three dead martyrs. All marchers will be expected to wear a mourning band. The parade is scheduled to start promptly at 1:30 p. m. Richard J. Dwyer, chief marshal, is anxious to have the participants reach the Common at 3:45 p.m. United States Senator David I. Walsh will be the only speaker.

Captain John J. Murphy, chief of staff, announced that Lieutenant-Colonel John Dunn and Cornelius Curran, World War veterans, have been added to his staff.

All service men identified with military organizations are requested to appear in uniform. It is expected there will be at least 2,000 such men in the line of march. Residents of outlying cities and towns are requested by Chief Marshal Dwyer to congregate in the halls in their respective localities and select their own marshals. All organizations are requested to report on time so as to be assigned their respective places in the procession.

Byrnes is laid upon the request that all participating bodies carry the United States national colors and the tri-colored flag of the Irish republic. The only designation allowed will be a draped card of small dimentions designating the divisional district. Each divisional district will be organized in single rank platoons of twelve marchers, twelve abreast, with a platoon commander. School children wearing black sashes will lead each division. As to music Chief Marshal Dwyer announces that there will be positively only one band in the line of march.

The marshal staff of the Roslindale contingent has been changed from Roslindale square to the quarters of the Knights of Columbus in that section. A voluntary committee, consisting of Commander Joseph G. Shea of the Mount Hope Post of the American Legion, Adjutant Cosgrove and Comrades Linehan and Brown, is assisting in enlisting a large contingent of ex-service men from West Roxbury, Howard C. Norton of the Cecil Fogg Post of the Legion in Hyde Park will take part.

ELINOR GLYN SAYS 'VAMPIRES' WILL DISAPPEAR FROM DRAMA

HER FAME DUE TO TRUTH

Power of Words Also Helped to Win Success, Says Author of "Three Weeks"

Some twenty-seven years ago a little auburn-haired English girl sat tailor-fashion in a great chair that was a part of the somber setting of her father's house.

Many times before she had sat in the same chair gazing up at a painting of one of her ancestors—and thinking.

There was nothing unusual in this girl thinking. She had been given to the practice almost since babyhood.

Often she would sit in this room with her older sister and their governess. One day her sister remarked about the painting, "Grandfather is looking right at me." Then the governess said "Why, no, my dear, he is looking directly at me." And the little girl with auburn hair looked up in surprise —for she was sure that those steel gray eyes done by the artist were looking at her.

MRS. GLYN'S "TRUTH."

The little girl with the auburn hair was Elinor Glyn, destined to become one of the world's greatest novelists.

Somehow she could not shake the thought that there was a lesson behind the fact that her grandfather's eyes looked directly at one no matter what chair she sat in. Then suddenly there came the understanding.

"That is Truth," she murmured. And then and there she determined that if she ever wrote anything she would look the camera of Life directly in the eye.

In the dining room of the Copley-Plaza she told this story for the first time to a reporter for the Boston American. "To what other thing than the power of Truth do you owe your success?" asked the reporter.

"To the power of words," Mrs. Glyn replied. This, too, had been thought out by the little auburn-haired girl.

It seems that the little girl was especially fond of reading Edgar Allan Poe. Best of all his poems she liked "The Raven." She used to picture the man sitting there in his luxurious chamber, deep in meditation. One day she asked herself how she had gained the impression that the chamber was a luxurious one. She searched through the verses and saw that Poe had painted this picture with four words. Thus she came to realize the power of words.

BARS BALDHEADED "HERO."

Mrs. Glyn today is the sort of woman that could only develop from an exteremely well bred little girl who loved to think. The auburn hair is still untinged with grey. This, because her soul is still young. And, from her mystical eyes, that young soul looks out at one and attests to the sincerity of the woman.

Mrs. Glyn has left for New York on her way to the coast where she will make a study of the motion picture business at the request of the Paramount Corporation. Mrs. Glyn is much interested in the silent drama and believes it has a wonderful new future.

Hear search for the ideal man of today is, she declares, a serious affair. He must typify the new era. He must be a man who has made a success of life within himself. He must be a mature man and not necessarily of great physique.

"Naturally," she said whimsically, "I would not wish him to be bald headed. But he must above all things have looked the camera in the eye. Through Truth, he must be a success."

SEE ROMANTIC ERA.

When asked what she thought the effect of the political changes in Europe would be on European literature, Mrs. Glyn said she believes the people will return to a more romantic age and that the "vampire" types, as they are called, in America, will disappear from literature and drama.

"People want better things," she declared. "Life, as they admire it now, is sweeter than during the past few decades. The line of thought is cleaner."

So the reporter left for the office, thinking of the little auburn-haired girl who sat in the huge chair, thinking. And he knew that she had followed out her determination to look the camera in the eye and make the most of the power of Truth and Words.

HOUSING GRAFT GROWS IN N. Y.

Crimes of All Sorts Shown in Probe, Besides $2,000,000 Taken from Unions

New York, Oct. 29.—Counsel for the Lockwood Joint Committee, investigating housing conditions in this city today, declared that even the revelations of more than $2,000,000 graft wrung from members of the Building Trades Unions and contractors within the year are to pale into comparative insignificance beside the disclosures still to be made by the inquiry.

Crimes of all sorts, including destruction of evidence bearing on the matters under investigation, were admitted by witnesses yesterday, and it was stated today that other crimes, as yet untouched upon, would be bared.

Testimony was introduced yesterday to show that Robert P. Brindell, president of the Building Trades Council, which controls 115,000 workers, had bnefited to the extent of more than $1,000,000 personally from the "honest graft" obtained from the members of the unions, as well as from the bribes alleged to have been paid by contractors to get the strikes on their jobs declared off by the labor leaders.

BRINDELL PRESENT.

Brindell was present during much of the session yesterday, watching as witness after witness took the stand and added to the revelations of a state of affairs rivalling those that existed in the notorious days of the Sam Parks rule. He appeared to be unconcerned by the statements involving him and the Building Trades Council in the huge graft conspiracy.

He was pictured by the witnesses as imposing a heavy tribute upon both employer and employed, extorting bribes, ordering building bids revised upward so as to provide for his "rake off" and scrapping of unions affiliated with the Federation of Labor. Witnesses said that last Monday the Metal Lath Contractors' Organization met in secret and destroyed records of former meetings.

Even the Fuller Construction, doing an annual business of more than $40,000,000, was forced to comply with Brindell's demands, said witnesses.

DICTATED TERMS.

Franklin Nevins, an attorney, testified that Brindell had ordered a contracting job bid raised from $275,000 to $400,000 and dictated the terms upon which he would allow the work to proceed.

He was alleged to have received an income of more than a $1,000,000 a year in the shape of "honest graft" from the union men themselves and enforced bribes from contractors.

Collectors for his house workers' union have been taking $10 weekly from 1,800 union members for the right to work in New York. This money does not confer union membership, said the witnesses.

Roswell D. Tompkins, secretary of the Building Trades Council, told of the $1,900 rental paid by the council to Mrs. Brindell for the use of a house owned by her, and of the salaries paid to officers of the council. Otherwise, he said, the expenses are light.

Samuel Untermyer, attorney for the committee, asked for an adjournment until after election day, in order to gain time in which to digest the mass of material disclosed by witnesses.

He had numerous affairs with women and bestowed an automobile on each of his sweethearts.

He spoke longingly of Utah and said some day he would go West and become a Mormon.

He arrived home at 3 o'clock one morning, and waving an American flag made her march around the room in front of him, chanting "Onward Christian Soldiers."

"He has thrown the clock at me three times," said Mrs. Mundy.

"The same clock each time?" asked the Court.

"No, brand new ones. I think he bought clocks especially to throw at me."

Mrs. Mundy testified that her husband was worth $1,000,000 and was paying a large alimony to a former wife.

Boston Hotel Men Will Readjust Costs Satisfactorily, Says Their Counsel

Lower food prices in Boston hotels are forecasted by John P. Feeney, counsel for the Boston Hotel Men's Association, who states that members of the association will meet to consider food prices from every angle.

The meeting will be held tomorrow at No. 100 Boylston street, when reports from a sub committee, which has been investigating the food situation, will be read.

Following a conference with U. S. District Attorney Daniel J. Gallagher in the Federal building, Attorney Feeney said: "I feel that I am reflecting the views of the hotel men when I say that they are showing a disposition to meet this question squarely, and when it comes to a question of prices they will go as far as any hotel men in the country. They will consider the subject from every angle and I am sure that the public will be satisfied when the final result is reached."

The special session of the Federal grand jury, which has been hearing evidence on excessive food prices in cafes and hotels had adjourned until next Wednesday. Assistant United States Attorney Lewis Goldberg, who is conducting the grand jury proceedings, expects the jury to report its findings next week to Judge James M. Morton, Jr.

EUROPE MUST WORK WITH U. S., SAYS FILENE

Chicago, Oct. 29. — Europe's only hope of safety from the ever increasing menace of economic disaster and Bolshevism is a new era of international co-operation with the United States. This would be the balancing factor in Europe's future, according to E. A. Filene, of Boston, in an address delivered before the City Club here.

"There is such friction between the new nations created by the peace treaty that only general co-operation can prevent future wars," Mr. Filene said. "Co-operation can only be effective, as events since the peace treaty have shown, when the United State takes her part in the work."

NEW ARREST IN DREWES' DEATH

Cuban Held as Witness to Purchase of Gun by Brines in Pawn Shop

Philadelphia, Oct. 29.—William T. Brines, University of Pennsylvania student, charged with the murder of [illegible] Drewes, Harrisburg senior, purchased the automatic pistol found in the abandoned car in an Eleventh street pawnshop last June. Carlos Arnoldson, a Cuban student at Pennsylvania, was with him at the time.

Major Samuel O. Wynne, chief of the county detectives, today ordered that Arnoldson be held as a material witness. He was released in $1,500 bonds furnished by a wealthy Cuban resident in this city.

Joseph Sharp, clerk in the pawnshop where the revolver was purchased, identified Arnoldson as the man who accompanied Brines when the pistol was bought and also identified the pistol as one sold by him. Sharp stated that when Brines purchased the weapon, he said he wanted it to carry in the hip pocket of his car for self-protection.

Major Wynne expressed the belief today that back of the murder lies a debt of $300, which Brines owed Drewes, and that a ride in Brines' car and some liquor led up to the actual shooting. There are one or two phases of the case that continue to baffle the police.

Whereas a few days ago Mrs. Drewes, mother of the slain lad, had expressed the wish that Brines escape as lightly as possible, today Christian L. Drewes, the father, said he hoped Brines would be punished if guilty.

Brewe at Lake Quinsigamond. There has been a series of holdups at the lake which has terrorized the section and the police think that the boys are responsible. They told the officers that they were out of work and planned the robberies to raise funds for a proposed trip to the New Hampshire woods.

WILSON CALLED 'WAR CASUALTY'

Secretary Tumulty Reveals Human Side of Retiring President in Speech

Washington, Oct. 29.—Released from secrecy by the fact that on March 4 President Wilson will pass out of public life, Joseph P. Tumulty, his private secretary, for the first time revealed many intimate details of the President's actions in the great war. A Democratic rally at Bethesda, Md., was the occasion for the address.

It was the Woodrow Wilson, Tumulty said, who conceived the plan for combining the Allied armies in the war under the supreme command of General Foch, in order that all the Allied forces could be concentrated on the German forces to crush them.

"It was he who insisted on the mining of the North Sea to cut off the German submarines, thereby holding them so that they could not escape from their base.

"Experts said that it could not be done. The civilian Wilson said it could be done, must be done and it was. It brought the German submarine warfare to an end."

[illegible] pictures, one that of the vigorous Woodrow Wilson delivering the great war message over three years ago, and another that of Woodrow Wilson broken in health, reviewing the World War veterans' parade recently in a wheel chair, Tumulty classified the President's illness as one of the casualties of the war.

"In that procession there appears an ambulance laden with wounded soldiers, the maimed, the halt and the blind," said Tumulty. "As they pass they salute slowly, reverently. The President's right hand goes up in answering salute. I glanced at him. There were tears in his eyes. The wounded is greeting the wounded, those in the ambulance, he in the chair, are alike casualties."

HOPED FOR PEACE.

In a preface to his address, explaining why he broke the seal of secrecy at this time, the President's secretary pictured him a man "as strangely misunderstood by some and as violently misrepresented by others as any man in the whole history of politics since Washington."

"I saw him firmly hold our nation in neutrality in the most trying circumstances of the World War. I know how his heart flamed against the outrages which Germany was committing. But he knew, better than anyone else, that the general mind of America was not prepared for war. He hoped even against hope that the United States might be able to serve the cause of justice and democracy as a mediator between the contendents. At last came the direct challenge from Germany, the announcement of unrestricted warfare.

"President Wilson rode to the capitol and amid wild cheers from the floor and galleries presented his great war message. It is one of the immortal documents of history which will be read so long as men love liberty, have faith in justice and respect human rights.

"On that fateful day I rode with him back to the White House. The echo of applause still ringing in my ears. For awhile he sat silent and pale in the Cabinet room. At last he said: 'Think what it was they were applauding. It means death for our young men. How strange it seems to applaud that.'

VERA CRUZ INCIDENT.

"Then word came, back in 1914, that a German vessel laden with munitions was on its way to Mexico. President Wilson was in telephone communication with Secretaries Bryan and Daniels.

"After the situation had been stated over the telephone, the voice came back clean and firm: 'Order Admiral Mayo to take Vera Cruz at once!' I was on the phone and heard the conversation. I added a word to the President about the tragedy of it all. His voice responded, no longer clear but muffled, as when one chokes back a sob: 'What do you think of it, Tumulty, it means death. It breaks my heart, but it must be done.'

"There was something too fine in his nature for the dramatics and posturings of the political game as it is usually played. I recall a little incident at Sea Girt. A journalist had written him up and we wanted him to do one of the little stunts that the public dearly loves to read about.

"He said to me: 'Tumulty, you must realize that I am not built for these things. I do not want to be displayed before the public. If I tried to do it I would do it badly. I want people to love me but they never will.'

LONELY BECAUSE OF GENIUS.

"This lonely man is lonely not because he disdains love. He craves it with all his soul. He is lonely because of his genius. The greatest genius always walks companionless. Lincoln had not one single confidant, not one single intimate companion. Sadness is written in his face. So it is with Woodrow Wilson. He would love to feel the familiar touch of the ordinary camaraderie of life, but it cannot be so. The knowledge that it cannot be, saddened him from the outset."

If Love Hurts Studies, Throw Books Away

Philadelphia, Oct. 29.—"If the love affairs that develop as a result of co-educational schools leave no time for geometry and other prescribed studies, let the studies go," said Mrs. Marietta T. Johnson, an educator of Fair Hope, Ala., in addressing a group of teachers at the City Club.

"The purpose of the high school is education for life," she continued, "and love affairs are a greater lesson in life than any course ever prescribed in a high school curriculum."

LEAGUE ADVISORY, NOT BINDING, HUGHES SAYS

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 29.—Article X. of the League of Nations is destructive in that it is only advisory and does not bind the powers to its terms, Charles Evans Hughes declared in an address at the Columbia Club here.

As a substitute for Article X. Judge Hughes offered "the stability, the dignity, the consciousness of power and the humanitarianism of the United States in assurance that this nation would carry out the moral obligations to other countries not transmuted by a league with foreign powers."

Water As Beverage Is Boomed by Doctor

Drink more water and keep well is old advice but it cannot be improved upon, in the comment of a Boston physician, Dr. Fritz H. Talbot, who has made special investigations into the value and importance of water in the human system.

"The purpose of water is to keep the body in a state of equilibrium," he maintains.

"The various elements necessary for life will then be in solution to carry food from one part of the body to the other and to carry from the body waste products and abnormal elements.

"The human body is composed largely of water; 65 to 75 per cent. of the body of a new born infant is water and 58 to 65 per cent. of the body of an adult."

Dr. Talbot has made his investigations known in the current number of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

ALLEGED BOGUS LIQUOR STAMP SELLER ARRESTED

Efforts on the part of the Federal authorities to apprehend persons selling bogus revenue stamps have resulted in the arrest of Pasquale Barone, aged forty, of No. 18 Emerson street, East Boston, who was taken into custody on the charge of selling the stamps to a prohibition agent. Barone pleaded not guilty when arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Hayes and was held in $2,500 bail for a hearing on November 13.

Recently bottles of liquor bearing counterfeit revenue stamps were produced in a prohibition case before U. S. Commissioner Hayes.

SHAVE TICKLED; BARBER FINED

Judge Reprimands Attendant Who Forcibly Cut Whiskers of Insane Patient

Salem, Oct. 29.—Judge Sears in the District Court ruled that a patient at the Danvers State Insane Asylum, may not be forcibly shaved, if he cannot be shaved easily. He accordingly found Frank L. Hatch, barber at the institution, guilty of an attack on a patient named Robbins and fined him $25. Hatch appealed.

Testimony showed that Robbins was seated in the barber chair while his face was lathered by Jeremiah Whalen, another patient, preparatory to being shaved. When Hatch applied the razor to Robbins' face it tickled the latter so he squirmed to the floor. Hatch, it is alleged became amazed and vowed he would shave the patient dead or alive. Placing his knee against the patient's abdomen, he forcibly completed the job of removing the hirsuite growth. Judge Sears said that the treatment accorded the patient was improper and should not have been allowed. He said that the patient should have gone without a shave, if he could not have been shaved in an easy manner.

Beauty's Scalp is Torn Off by Machine

Chicopee, Oct. 29.—Pretty seventeen-year-old Florence Page of No. 127 Euclid street, noted for her luxuriant black hair, is marred for life as the result of an accident at the Dwight Manufacturing Company plant. Her hair became caught in the machinery and before help could reach her the young woman's scalp was torn off. She was rushed to Mercy Hospital, Springfield, where efforts were made to save her hair. 7,000 FAMILIES WITHOUT COAL

Brockton's Plight So Serious That Labor Union Calls for State-Control Law

Brockton, Oct. 29.—The Brockton Central Labor Union plans to petition the State Legislature to have a law passed immediately to enable cities and towns to enter the coal business and to sell coal to its citizens at cost.

Brockton is in dire straits as regards coal. According to a recent report by Mayor William L. Gleason, there are 7,000 Brockton families without coal and there are no prospects of any coal being delivered to them.

Congressman Olney has taken the matter up with officials at Washington and has placed Brockton's case squarely before them. A letter received this week from Secretary Tumulty stated that the plight of Brockton is fully realized in Washington and that steps were being taken to have coal shipped to this city at once.

A long stretch of cold weather will find Brockton unprepared to meet it. The soft coal situation is not serious, but the shortage in hard coal is acute.

SHELLS CARRIED ON LUSITANIA

Dudley Field Malone Reveals War Secret While Attacking Wilson Regime

New York, Oct. 28.—Branding Wilson's administration with perpetrating a reign of oppression and secrecy upon the public, Dudley Field Malone, Farmer-Labor candidate for Governor and former Collector of the Port of New York, declared in an address here that the Lusitania carried a consignment of 4,200 cases of cartridges for the British government when sunk by a German submarine. The shells contained eleven tons of black powder.

Senator La Follette, he said, was "framed" by the Wilson administration for telling the truth about the Lusitania cargo following the disaster. The attempt to expel the Wisconsin Senator was based on evidence which the government knew to be false, he declared.

REFUSED CARGO COPY.

"When Senator La Follette was on trial before the Senate Elections Committee within his right as a Senator," he continued, "he demanded from the Treasury Department a copy of the report of the collector of the port of New York, on condition and cargo of the Lusitania." The Treasury Department referred him to the State Department and the State Department refused on the ground that the report had become a part of the secret archives. As it happened, I wrote this report upon the Lusitania, because I had examined the Lusitania in my capacity as collector of the port of New York.

OFFERED TO TESTIFY.

"I considered then, and I consider now that the persecution of La Follette on a charge which the administration knew to be false from evidence in its own possession was a frame-up on Senator La Follette and a fraud on the American people.

"When I heard that Senator La Follette was refused access to my report, I informed his counsel and told his counsel to inform the government that I would testify in support of the Senator's statement and that I would not remain silent and see any man crucified for telling the truth. Whereupon the trial was postponed from week to week and finally dropped."

FRANCE DENIES COMING SHIFT OF AMBASSADORS

Paris, Oct. 29.—A statement issued by the French Foreign Office flatly contradicts American press reports that France would recall her ambassador to the United States if the Republicans win the election next Tuesday, and that a new ambassador would be appointed with instructions to follow the policy of the Republicans concerning a Society of Nations, in an attempt to form an alliance between the United States and France.

Ambassador Jusserand will leave for Washington on November 13 to

THREE IN FAMILY DEAD IN GAS-FILLED HOUSE

New York, Oct. 29.—Wind blowing through the cellar window blew out the gas flame under a water heater, and as a result a family of three is dead from asphyxiation and four persons who narrowly escaped the same fate are seriously ill. Dr. Maurice L. Radin, his wife and their seven-year-old son were killed. Three men who roomed with the physician's family at No. 126 West One Hundred and Nineteenth street, are in a hospital, and a woman roomer also suffered from the effects of inhaling gas, which saturated the entire four-story dwelling.

WALTHAM ALARMED BY INFANTILE PARALYSIS

POLITICAL PLOT, AVERS RATHOM

Says Roosevelt Attack Is Bid for Votes; Prints Charges Against Ex-Secretary

Providence, R. I., Oct. 29.—A full statement of the association of the Providence Journal with the United States government in espionage work during the war and the text of the letter on which Franklin D. Roosevelt bases his charges of slander were printed today in the Providence Journal by Editor John R. Rathom.

Roosevelt has sued Rathom, Scott Bone and E. B. Clark of the National Republican Committee for $500,000, charging the circulation of false and defamatory information.

Editor Rathom characterizes the action of District Attorney Caffey in publishing his letter to Attorney-General Gregory as an eleventh-hour bid for political favor and declares his alleged "confession" is refuted by the language of the letter itself.

"Mr. Caffee's attack on me is an attempt to turn public attention from the charges brought by me against Franklin D. Roosevelt in connection with his record as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, which charges slander as I made them," said Mr. Rathom.

"The statement that the letter was written by me to avoid appearance before a Grand Jury is a falsehood. I accede to the request for such a communication because I desired to protect hundreds of loyal citizens who had constantly given us very important information. Neither in the letter nor subsequently have I disclosed more than a very few of the real sources of our information and those which I disclosed were known to the government before I wrote the letters."

GIRL ELOPER, 14, BROUGHT BACK

Lawrence Police Seeking Extradition of Man From New York on Statutory Charge

Lawrence, Oct. 29.—Rose Hoarbey, aged fourteen, of spruce street, this city, arrested in New York with her "intended," Arech Hannes, aged nineteen, of Jackson street, this city, appeared in Juvenile Court here before Judge J. J. Mahoney.

The case was continued to allow extradition proceedings for bringing Hannes to this city on a serious charge. William Borelli, aged sixteen, who accompanied the two to the Empire State was in court, but the host man also appeared in court although no charges was lodged against him. The intended bride and Borelli were brought to this city in custody of Patrolman Thomas McCarlie.

WERE ARRESTED AT PIER.

The bridal party had been suspected because of suspicious actions on board the steamer Northland, and were arrested as they reached the pier in New York. The girl has been in the custody of a society for the care of children, and the would-be groom is still in the Tombs waiting the disposal of his case.

The charge he will press a statutory offense against him.

The pair attended the Shipman grammar school last Monday. Application for a marriage license was made at the City Hall the next day, and the couple with the proposed best man left for Boston. They went to Lynn and later to Salem, where they are alleged to have remained in a hotel. They returned to Boston and sailed for New York.

"POSTPONED" CEREMONY.

The "proposal" was made on a bench in the Lawrence Common, according to the girl's story. She said that they started immediately on their journey on the protest that the ceremony would be performed at once in Boston. At no time on the trip did the young man attempt to have the marriage ceremony performed, the girl stated to the police. It is probable that the would-be groom will be turned over to the Salem police.

RAID SALOON SIX HOURS AFTER IT IS OPENED

Lawrence, Oct. 29.—The first jail sentence for selling moonshine was given by Judge J. J. Mahoney in his District Court when Louis Beaumier of No. 426 Broadway was sentenced to three months in the local jail. On a similar charge Morris Lerer was fined $50. Both men appealed. Beaumier opened a near-beer saloon on Broadway following a raid on his Amesbury street establishment. The police allege that some of the liquor found on the premises had been buried in the cellar.

SHOULD A HUSBAND FORGIVE AN ERRING WIFE?

Should a husband forgive the wife who has erred?

Mr. Kenyon, whose wife confessed on the witness stand that she had had a secret love affair with Dr. Tetlow, whom she afterwards shot, says he will forgive. American readers are for the most part evidently of his opinion.

The Boston American has received the following letters from readers who were impressed by Mr. Kenyon's magnanimity. Men and women both commend him. Their opinions generally show the trend of modern thought, which is more liberal toward woman than it used to be. Then it was always the wife who was expected to forgive.

Read what American readers think of the Kenyon case.

NETS THAT ENTANGLE.

Editor American:

Mr. Kenyon is right. There are many loopholes in life, snares and nets that entangle. None of us is so free that we escape them. Many of us fall into the path of the erring. Many of us yield to temptation, a weakness of human nature is inherent to all. Life is what we make it. Ready to forgive and forget is to bring to a better understanding the erring hearts. Heal a wound rather than that you rip it wide open and leave a sore of dispelling fire. Bridge the gap of misunderstanding, for what is life if not peace in happiness?

MAX HENRY NEWMAN.

WHAT THE BIBLE SAYS.

Editor American:

Read St. John 8: 1, 11. What did Jesus write on the ground? An American scholar, Professor Casper Rene Gregory of the University of Leipsic, from manuscripts preserved with pious care in Athens and in Dresden, has deciphered what he maintains were the very words Jesus wrote down in the confusion of the woman's accusers, so that they slunk away in shame.

The first Pharisee, Eldad, the oldest, looked at the sand and read: "Yehang Eldad eth adoneth Nador ha moidvar" (and Eldad killed his friend Nador in the wilderness).

The picture of that day forty years ago, when he slew his friend, flashed through his mind like lightning. No man saw it; yet has it come to light? Without a word Eldad turned and vanished in the crowd. Jesus smoothed over the sand with a stroke and wrote once more, while the next man, Horan, read: "Vganch Horan eth neth almarath" (and Horan cast Horan aside the house of the widow of Bunam). Horan hurried away.

Jesus wrote and Mumon read: "Va Yishkah Mumon eth eisheth Arahed bachlai (and Ahrod's wife was forced to yield to the power of Mumon). And when Mumon had gone away Jesus wrote still more rapidly, and the scribes read until not one of them was left. He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." Jesus.

A SIXTY-YEAR-OLD

WOULD NEVER FORGIVE.

Editor American:

I have been the paper every evening regarding the case of Mrs. Kenyon. It is a strange world since the women got the vote why not let the woman have the same justice as the man. What did Mr. Brown get for shooting a man? If I had done such a sinful act I would not expect forgiveness and the mother of my husband had done it I would never forgive him. Young girls are now the cause of many a broken home by their queer infatuation for married men. I have had and heard of several cases

ADMIRAL CONDOURIOTIS ELECTED GREEK REGENT

London, Oct. 29.—Admiral Condouriotis has been elected regent of Greece by the Chamber of Deputies, according to a Central News dispatch from Athens today. When the Greek government formally called Prince Paul to the throne last week in the order of royal succession, it was announced by Premier Venizelos that a regent would be appointed pending the arrival of the King.

To Relieve Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness And Head Noises

Persons suffering from catarrhal deafness, or who are growing hard of hearing and have head noises will be glad to know that this distressing affliction has usually been successfully treated at home by an internal medicine that is now obtainable. Those who have tried many remedies without relief after other treatments have failed, often state that this simple method has had their hearing restored to such an extent that the tick of a watch was plainly audible seven or eight inches away. Those who are troubled in this way should write Sheridan, 14 Sheridan Bldg., Syracuse, N. Y., and ask for a free trial of this prescription, which they may have been the means of saving some one suffering from catarrhal deafness. The prescription can be prepared at home and is made as follows:

Secure from your druggist 1 oz. Parmint (Double Strength). Take this home and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and a little granulated sugar; stir until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day.

Parmint is used in this way not only to relieve by stimulating action the inflammation in the lining of the Eustachian Tubes, and thus to equalize the air pressure on the drums, but to help remove any excess of secretions in the middle ear, and the results are often astonishingly quick and effective.

Every person who has catarrh in any form, or distressing rumbling, hissing sounds in the head, should give this recipe a trial.—Advertisement.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GRAY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies Are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the glossy and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.—Advertisement.

GIRLS! LEMONS BLEACH; WHITEN

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which can be had at any drug store, shake well and you have a perfect lemon bleach for few cents.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day, then shortly note the beauty of your skin.

Famous stage beauties use lemon juice to bleach and bring that soft, clear, rose-white complexion. Lemon have always been used as a freckle, sunburn and tan bleach. Make this up and try it.—Advertisement.

BOSTON TRAFFIC IN STORAGE WHISKEY IS REVEALED BY PROBER

Strangers have no difficulty in getting intoxicants in Boston. Those with acquaintances or friends in the city find the matter simplicity itself. For "friendship" plays no inconsiderable part in the traffic in prohibited liquors. The man who knows a source of liquor seems always willing and ofttimes eager to aid his friends in securing a supply.

Like most other illegal trades, liquor selling would become far too perilous for those engaged in it, even though law enforcement officers winked at evasions of the law, if it were not for "friendship." But because of that mysterious bond, those in the illicit traffic need be known but to a handful of persons to sell liquor to hundreds.

Here is a typical example of how the thing works out, which came to the attention of the special investigator, while he sought information as to how hard or how easy it is to get liquor in dry Boston. The same illustration shows that the traffic in case lots of whiskey is no small one.

"Can you line a case of good whiskey?"

The question was formerly a worker in one of Boston's gayest eating places, but ousted. He was found in his present quarters not by the name of "Joe." These previous acquaintance had been limited to the fact that a few years ago the investigator frequently ate at the table served by "Joe."

They chanced to meet on Washington street. The former waiter was standing in the doorway of one of the largest downtown hotels. Following a greeting the investigator propounded his customary question.

"Where can I get some good liquor?"

After a moment's thought the former waiter asked:

HOW "JOE" WORKS.

"Can you use a case of good whiskey?"

The investigator thought he might. Joe promptly suggested an adjournment to a nearby saloon, where over two glasses of beer and a cigar the matter was discussed.

Said the former garçon:

"If I'd met you yesterday, I could have got some stuff for you from a friend of mine in the government service. But he sold the most of his last night. I'm going to New Jersey tonight. I'm traveling for a specialty house now you know—and when I come back I'll bring you some."

"When will that be?"

"Next week."

"But you said something about a case?"

"Yes—there's some over in a government warehouse, if I can reach a friend of mine."

"Understand," he went on, after a pause, "this man isn't in the business of selling liquor, any more than I am. But I like to accommodate a friend and so does he, and I think as long as you want it held let you have it out of friendship for me."

"You mean that he will get it from a government warehouse?"

"Exactly."

After a long conversation it was arranged that the investigator should be introduced to Joe's friend, and that efforts would be made to have the latter part with half a case (the smallest amount said friend would consent to sell, according to Joe), at the rate of $12 per quart.

The former waiter insisted that that price was "just what it cost my friend."

"My friend is a swell," explained Joe. "He's made a lot of money on the ponies up in Montreal. Cleaned up on 'Man-O'-War.' He's in right somewhere and I know he gets liquor from a Government warehouse."

Then began the quest of the "swell friend." It led to the lobbies of several first class hotels, where Joe said, he hung around to "meet people."

It ended in the lobby of one of the largest downtown hotels, patronized by the wealthiest and most prominent people of the country when they stop downtown in Boston. Here Joe pointed out a young man, faultlessly garbed, whom he introduced as "Mr. Levine."

"This is a friend of mine, Mr. Levine," explained Joe, indicating the investigator, "who is very anxious to get something."

"Haven't got a thing left," said Levine. "Sorry I can't accommodate you, but I'm leaving town tonight and don't know where there is anything."

"Moe told me you had one case left," suggested Joe.

With a wink at Joe the modish young man shook his head.

"All right," said Joe, leading the investigator away. At the door of the hotel Joe clutched the investigator's arm.

"He's afraid of you—don't know you, you see," he explained.

"I don't think he's got any," said the investigator.

"Sure he has—I'll bet you $24 against two quarts I will get half a case from him. But he won't deal with anyone he don't know—just does it out of friendship you see."

The bet was made. While the investigator waited on the steps of the hotel, watching the throngs on one of Boston's busiest corners, Joe returned to see "Mr. Levine."

"I win the bet," announced Joe as he returned and joined the investigator, "he's afraid. You see he won't do business with strangers. He's cleaned up everything but this one case, and is superstitious about being arrested through that. He won't get with us himself, but you and I will go over and he'll arrange to have us get it. Only he wants his money now."

A few minutes later Joe and the investigator were on their way to south Boston in a taxicab. Joe had cautioned the investigator not to say anything that would give the taxi driver a hint of their errand. But in reply to questions he said that "Mr. Levine" did not live in the hotel, where the investigator had met him, but somewhere in the Back Bay, using that and other first-class hotels as offices for which he paid no rent.

Well-patronized barrooms, first-class hotels, pool rooms, stores frequented chiefly by men, and even the corridors of large office buildings, are used by purveyors of liquors as "offices" in which to make and consummate their deals.

MANY PRECAUTIONS.

To return to the taxi, rapidly metering over Summer street extension—

It was driven to a corner, which in the fast-fading daylight—it was shortly after 4 o'clock—the investigator could not definitely locate especially as there were no signposts in sight. It was a couple of blocks from the South Boston end of the bridge, and about two streets west of Summer street, in the heart of the warehouse district.

In every direction loomed gigantic warehouses. Save for an occasional belated laborer, the streets were deserted. Joe explained there would be a few minutes wait. It proved to be a half hour's wait.

Then suddenly a door was slammed, and from the direction of one of the warehouses a short, stout man approached, carrying a large bundle done up in heavy wrapping paper. He came directly to the cab.

"Are you Joe?" he asked.

"Right here," said Joe, opening the cab door.

"Right-o!" exclaimed the man, pushing the bundle into the cab. He closed the door, and walked briskly down the street without another word. Thanks to the speed with which the incident took place, and the carefulness with which Joe interposed himself between the stout man and the investigator's eyes, the latter had but the most fleeting glimpse of the man's face.

FLEETING GLIMPSE.

In order of Joe, the cab was driven slowly through the deserted streets of the Peninsular district's waterfront, while the former waiter untied the bundle, removed two quarts of whiskey—his winnings—and retied the bundle.

At the South Station Joe alighted. A quart of whiskey protruded from one hip pocket. He held another under his coat. Only a blind man could have mistaken his cargo. Yet he walked unafraid into the South Station.

Another investigator found himself in possession of four quarts of solid "Sunnybrook" whiskey, which is the best of his knowledge and belief had but a few minutes before reposed in a government warehouse.

Where else was the investigator to apply for prohibited liquors?

To complicate he had now secured quart bottles purchased by the investigator it bore the usual "For medicinal purposes only" label, showing that it had come from a government warehouse since prohibition.

ESPERANTO, IN TRIAL SPIN, CHARMS THE CANADIANS

Lunenburg Pilot Will Sail with Captain Welch During Big International Race

By BERT FORD.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 29.—With the Yankee schooner Esperanto on her first practice spin over the official triangular course the Nova Scotian champion Delawanna, due to arrive here late today from Lunenburg, and the opening race only twenty-four hours away, interest in the international classic for fishermen was keyed to a high pitch.

In response at Campbell's dock the Gloucester schooner passed motorsailer entrance to inner bay and they like her model. But they were almost eager to see Captain "Marty" Welch put his fine thoroughbred pace today. Under sail she made even a bigger hit with local mariners.

ESPERANTO THE PRETTIER.

The Esperanto is prettier to look at than the Delawanna. She has more graceful lines and she has been polished off which greater art and care. A rich metallic job was done with the painting. Her carriage is keyed to new and her finish are varnished. She looks sleeker than the Delawanna, which is as keen contender. The topsides of both schooners are black. The bottom of the Yankee boat is red and that of the Delawanna is a vivid green.

As a result of the first meeting of the Canadians and Americans it was decided not to interfere with the personnel of the Esperanto crew. This means that Commodore Lawrence F. Percival of the Corinthian Yacht Club of Marblehead, Mass., and Commodore Benjamin H. Colby of the Gloucester Yacht Club, and Ernest H. Hendrix, boatswain of Gloucester, will continue to be classed as active members of Captain Welch's racing crew, although the Canadian crew would much prefer to limit the crew to working fishermen.

It was also agreed to allow each schooner to carry, in addition to a navigator, a navigator's mate, a cook and a pilot. The Delawanna will not take advantage of the pilot privilege, as the local course is so well known to them. Captain Welch, however, will avail himself of the advantage of securing the services of Pilot Solomon Pilot.

Charles Martin of Lunenburg will fill the role of pilot on the Yankee boat.

LIMIT CANVASS.

The joint committee limited canvas on the two contesting schooners to sails used as regular fishing equipment, four towers, two topsails, one mainsail and one jib-top sail.

Rock of metal ballast is left to the option of the skipper and shifting of ballast will be allowed after the firing of the fifteen minute preparatory gun. A gun will be fired at noon, one before the start to help the boats to get their craft ready, another will be fired five minutes before the starting gun.

All time must be taken from the starboard end of the course and the race will be made at 1 p. m. on Saturday. The time limit will be nine hours in the event that the race is postponed delay the start somewhat the race must be completed in not more than 6 p. m., or it will be called off.

The regular racing rules of the road will be observed, and there will be some silver trophy, standing five feet high, donated by the Halifax Herald, to be known as the Sportsman challenge trophy. The cup is to remain in the possession of a municipality or a recognized sporting organization. It will be open to an annual challenge.

RACE OFF HALIFAX IN 1921

Next year the race will be run the best two out of three races. The trophy must be raced far on Halifax next year also and afterwards in accordance with the deed of gift.

Races will then be held alternately at Halifax and Gloucester. Captain William H. Thomas of Gloucester was appointed representative of the Esperanto to sail on the Delawanna. Howard Lawrence will represent the Delawanna on the Esperanto.

At the meeting it was announced that a United States destroyer would attend the races and that the Canadian Vicks would be at the disposal of the committee. The sporting committee, consisting of Captain Zinck and W. J. Rose, inspects the Esperanto and Delawanna today.

Sightseeing craft were warned to do everything possible to keep the course clear.

On race men who have been little mentioned in connection with the races will depend in a great measure the success of the respective sponsors.

They are the builders and the ship's cooks.

The remaining skill of the builders will play an important part as will the culinary skill of the cooks, because, without nourishing grub, a crew would have little pep to win.

COOKS KEPT BUSY.

Isaiah Godbee is cook on the Delawanna and Josiah Goobee is steward on the Esperanto. Goobee like Captain Welch and several other members of the yankee schooner's crew, is a native of Nova Scotia, but adopted the United States thirty-four years ago.

The crew say no ship can run with a cook with such a hefty hunk name as Isaiah and a chap who can turn out such tempting chow.

Isaiah Godbee is a Negro. He can lecture as well as he can cook and that's saying a lot and he doesn't reel out cheap talk.

Most everything Isaiah says is corn, minus the cobs—words which are as thick as raisins in his rice pudding, but Isaiah's profanity sets well. It garnishes his conversation and drives home his points.

Here was Isaiah's line today:

"Tell all you can log, borrow and steal on the Esperanto. It's the surest and easiest way I know of to gather money. Soft pickings. It's a cinch, but I take the other tack with my Lunenburger and 'work' for what I get. I hid them by pretending that we haven't got a look in. I want them to drop their dough.

The Log of the Esperanto

By EDWARD T. MILLETT

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 29.—What better little could one ask for a sea story? I was cautioned by my managing editor to sign on as a member of the crew of the Esperanto for the trip to Halifax.

I admit I was a little nervous at first for I realized should we become involved anywhere out in the well known Bay of Fundy that it was a long walk to windward home. Nevertheless, I got on board an hour before the craft sailed.

Captain "Marty" Welch, ruddy faced, hands clinched, paced nervously back and forth across the deck, pausing long enough to face a battery of camera men and moving picture machines.

"I never knew what it meant to be so popular," exclaimed the skipper as he seated himself on the wheel box to be shot and re-shot by the movies.

A GREAT SENDOFF

The departure from the "salt wharf" at Pier 9 was a remarkable affair and one long to be remembered.

Here and there all up in Gloucester I have never before witnessed such a scene as when the Esperanto, in tow of the tug Dieteth, was towed out of the harbor on the first leg of the greatest ocean race ever held on the high seas.

Just before the departure, Colonel A. Piatt Andrew called Captain Welch ashore to the wheel house and presented to him, on behalf of the Gloucester Board of Trade, upon his advice, a handsome loving cup, made entirely of silver, was presented to Colonel Andrew in the village of "Holy Trinity" of the Sea, Provincetown, where the Virgin Mary is supposed to have visited about the year 1000 and just before the Pilgrim fathers' homes were buried. I carried this loving cup throughout the entire week," said Colonel Andrew to me, "and I presented it to Captain Welch on a platter covered as a sort of silken mask that would bring him good luck and also his most popular cruise, he says, fishing vessel he has ever manned."

Coming as it did, it rattle made the captain think greatly, and although he said but little I could see that somehow or other his mind was wandering out across the Bay of Fundy to Halifax Harbor, the mouth of the Atlantic to the battlefields of Europe and a little round shore which was a welcome cross bearing an identification tag reading something like this, "Martin L. Welch, Jr., Second Corps U. S. Marines," and I thought as I gazed intently at his tanned face, that a mist came over his eyes as he gazed seaward, yet he did not speak. A lump arose in his throat. His hands, so often clinched, went deep into his pockets and he turned on his heel and strode to the bow of the schooner.

There he was joined by Benjamin A. Smith, the owner of The Esperanto, and Captain Charles Harty, who was the first skipper to take her out of port after she came from the yard in Essex.

PUT THROUGH PACES.

The fire alarm was blowing furiously, steamboat whistles shrieked and cheers from the thousands lining the waterfront. Roofs and stackings, topmast heads, riggins, every place was thronged. The auxiliary boat Nyoda, Captain Charlie Nelson, was off of our starboard bow.

Captain Charles Harty had the wheel and sent her spinning in a trial run out of the harbor and around the breakwater.

I want to be sure that this boat is perfect in her course before I give the word," said Captain Harty. "And I would feel sorry if I found that she did not respond to Marty as she did to me when I had her."

A port tack was made to the breakwater as the scenic road, lined with the highest, and the sou'wester, looking up a chop, sent her flying with port rail buried, at a ten-knot clip. Up went the jib topsail. "Block 'em down," rolled the skipper, and each man jumped for the halyards and went to it with a will.

The staysail was next on next and then the fun commenced.

The Nyoda, under power, was left behind and the Esperanto, with a 25-mile breeze topping aloft, sailed circles around her as she stood off for the whistling buoy.

Captain Marty later sent her on a windward tack that brought us close to Norman's Woe, the sea breaking on our quarter and splashing over the deck.

"Hard a lee," sung out the skipper and the course shifted quickly as the schooner responded.

We were now running back toward the breakwater, the Nyoda still trying to pick up and take off the visitors.

On the end of the breakwater, waving their hats, and one girl her coat, stood a crowd of late Summer residents who had crowded on the rocky projection for a last look at the Esperanto ere she started on her course down East.

By this time the Nyoda had come alongside. Nelson misjudged his distance for the auxiliary came crashing into our starboard side. The two vessels parted, however, without doing any damage, the bell and fog horn on the Nyoda were set going in salute and the Esperanto was free to run with a fair wind on her course.

SHORT LAST GOODBYS.

Slowly she swung her nose seaward, the thirty-two men on board shouted their last goodby to those on the Nyoda and we were off on our 246-mile run across the bay of Fundy to Halifax Harbor.

"That was some send-off," said the skipper, as he gazed toward the disappearing land, "and I hope we will get a recention as good as that when we come home."

ADMIRAL CONDOURIOTIS ELECTED GREEK REGENT

London, Oct. 29.—Admiral Condouriotis has been elected regent of Greece by the Chamber of Deputies, according to a Central News dispatch from Athens today. When the Greek government formally called Prince Paul to the throne last week in the order of royal succession, it was announced by Premier Venizelos that a regent would be appointed pending the arrival of the King.

Former King Constantine is unwilling to renounce his rights to the Hellenic throne and is refusing to give his consent to acceptance of the throne by his son, Paul, according to a Central News dispatch from Geneva, quoting members of Constantine's entourage.

RABBI PRAISES 'HUMORESQUE'

Says Film Play Appeals to Those of Every Faith Revealing True Jewish Life

By RABBI LEVI.

I saw "Humoresque" the other evening. I had heard much of it before it came here, and the favorable and enthusiastic criticism it had received I discovered was altogether justified. It is an interesting, appealing, satisfying picture.

It has, of course, its melodramatic features, those plot developments that in real life never, or so seldom transpire. But on the other hand it contains so much that is true, so much that is real, so much that is natural and typical. It is a real panorama of normal Jewish life. Mr. Kantor, Mrs. Kantor, Leon Kantor are all reflexes of real Jewish life, life as it is lived in the American ghetto.

Fannie Hurst wrote the story, and Fannie Hurst wrote it well because she wrote of her own people. She knows them from within. They represent no detached, objective, alien problem for her. She is of their heart and soul. She feels their pulse and shares the beat of their heart.

STORY OF MOTHER LOVE.

That is why the picture makes such strong appeal especially to those who are Jews, although as a gripping tale of mother love, it may well appeal to those of every faith.

And the picture is fair. It gives us Mrs. Kantor with so much that is attractive, and also Mr. Kantor with so little that is lovely about him. Each is a fair picture of the other. And both together photographically reproduce Jewish life in America. For they make the Jew appear so normal and human, which, after all, is what he really is. He is neither devil nor angel. He has his good qualities and his bad, his virtues and his weakness.

"Humoresque" presents us a composite picture of the Jew. Fannie Hurst shows to what extent the Jew, and for that matter every man, is affected by environment.

Mr. Kantor lives in the ghetto and remains a ghetto Jew. Leon Kantor leaves the ghetto and the change in him is so great that he no longer seems to be his father's son. Give the Jew, give the immigrant a chance and he will make good.

Leon Kantor becomes a great musician, a great violinist. How many great musicians, composers, pianists, and especially violinists, there are among the Jews. Almost every great violinist today was born of Jewish parents, and how many of them sprang from Russian stock.

"Humoresque" truthfully and sympathetically reveals the Jew to his non-Jewish neighbor. Yes, and it reveals the Jew to himself. For not all Jews know each other, and not all know themselves. It holds the mirror up to nature. It is worth seeing.

"Bathing Beauties" Excite Nyack, N. Y.

Nyack, N. Y., Oct. 29.—Six Nyack girls, four of them school girls, who displayed their movie ambitions in tights at a local theatre, have this town all excited.

The church element, led by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Latham, is "shocked." So is the bachelor faction—but differently.

A theatre offered a chance to boys and girls to get into real pictures. The boys were backward, but the six girls appeared in a "skimmie" dance, then as "bathing beauties" in tights.

EGGS CLIMBING UP FROM $1.23

Vegetables Also Rising; Chickens, Pork, Butter and Beef Somewhat Cheaper

With eggs at $1.23 a dozen and showing no sign of coming down as the season progresses, the Boston housewife is finding it a tough matter to keep within the limits of her weekly allowance. Veal is still high and hard to get at any price, ranging up to 70 cents. Lobsters, as low as 40 to 45 cents, are reported by the dealers.

In the meat market of the market basket the price of sirloin steak is 60 cents a pound, and round steak 55 cents a pound, while corned beef is selling at from 15 to 20 cents per pound. Fish prices are about the same as last week, with cusk for 7 cents a pound, and haddock 15 cents a pound.

There's a World of Satisfaction in Proving That Morse Values Are Unbeatable

Men who are buying clothes are warned not to judge clothes by price tickets. Clothes are often marked any convenient price in order to present the biggest bait to the unsuspecting public.

And yet, the Regular prices at which you find clothes at Morse's are LOWER than prices elsewhere, mark-downs and all! The advantage of buying direct from the maker was never so clearly demonstrated.

And, besides, every suit at Morse's is the careful product of a conscientious tailor. You cannot speak in the same breath of MORSE CLOTHES and most others you see about town. You never run the risk HERE of selecting a doubtful maker's rejects.

This, gentlemen, is the true situation. MORSE CLOTHES, priced as they are at rockbottom, meet replacement conditions, and offer you more REAL VALUE for than you can find anywhere else in town.

$30, $40, $50 or $60

Genuine Scotch Grain Brogue

Special Value $12.50

"I demand for myself absolute comfort in shoes which are at the same time smart looking, well fitting and long wearing and I can't expect any other man to demand less."
Chas O Emerson

YOUNG MEN! TAKE NOTICE!

THIS brand new Brogue of mine is designed solely for young men—and older men who want to stay young.

It is the smartest brogue pattern on the market today—more snap and style to it than you've ever seen before.

Made of genuine Imported Scotch Grain Leather that gives it plenty of swagger,—with a rawhide doubler in between the heavy oak sole to keep it waterproof.

Many stores are offering a shoe of similar quality at $5.00 a pair more than I ask. That is where my policy of stamping the actual retail price on the soles at the factory protects you. This price is based on the cost of materials and labor used. You don't have to pay extra for an extraordinary shoe.

This new brogue is only one of many of my attractive styles. Come in and let us show you how you can get more for your money in an Emerson Shoe than in any other.

Washington Leader Declares Majority of Clubs Do Not Want Lasker Plan

Chicago, Oct. 29.—"We are not going to consider the Lasker plan at our meeting in Chicago today," said Clark Griffith, part owner and manager of the Washington Baseball Club.

"We do not want the Lasker plan," continued Griffith, "and will not accept it under any circumstances. At our meeting we will consider plans for the reorganization of organized baseball, and we are not opposed to a board of control but that board must have baseball men on it. We are not in favor of turning over the direction of the game to men who know nothing of the business of baseball."

Griffith made it plain that the so-called ultimatum of the Chicago, New York and Boston clubs threatening to withdraw from the league unless the Lasker plan is accepted by November 10 will have no effect on tomorrow's meeting.

"It is up to those clubs to act," said Mr. Griffith. "If they want to get out of the league they can get out. We are not trying to push anybody out of the league, but if Chicago, New York and Boston want to draw out, it is up to them to get out [illegible] We are [illegible] or going along with the rest and for the Lasker plan."

Who Put Up the Money?

Quite a number of indictments have been returned by the Grand Jury which is investigating the world's series scandal.

Some of these indictments are against crooked ball players, some against men outside of baseball. The Grand Jury has apparently done it's work conscientiously and as thoroughly as circumstances permitted.

However, the impression is growing that the Grand Jury probe couldn't reach quite far enough into the scandal. The impression is growing that it hasn't as yet touched the roots of the cancer.

It is knowledge almost as common as Arnold Rothstein says the "fixing" of the world's series was, that none of the indicted men had enough money to arrange such a deal.

"Sleepy Bill" Burns, Abe Attell, Hal Chase, "Sport" Sullivan and all the rest are men ordinarily without any considerable means. If they had pooled all their resources they probably couldn't have raised the sum it took to "fix" a single ball player.

That some of the crooked players were "double crossed" out of the promised money, there is little doubt. But even so, a good-sized sum of money was used.

Someone, then, other than the men named probably provided the money. If guilty, Burns, Attell and the others were merely the tools with which the man or men behind them worked.

No "absolution" or "whitewashing" is going to obliterate certain impressions regarding this baseball affair from the minds of the fans.

And one of these impressions is that the bribe money did not come from "busted" ex-ball players, prize fighters or tinhorn gamblers.

When Love Holds the Reins

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1920, by International Feature Service, Inc.

IT is to laugh, isn't it, when you see a pair like this who are, oh, so deeply in love with each other and imagine in the fulness of their conceit that they are independent of the whole world and that they just happened to find their way each to the heart of the other. They don't see the mischievous little man in the background who has engineered the whole affair from the beginning—the laughing young chap who holds the reins, who's driving them to the altar. No, they don't see him at all, but he's there and he takes a delight in his share of the transaction. He's the power behind the throne.

—NELL BRINKLEY

How Women Can Defend Selves When Attacked by Men

HOW can a woman defend herself against sudden attack?

In the face of the abnormal [illegible] of assaults upon women [illegible] the question is a vital one for every woman who has to step beyond the four walls of her home.

Admitting that women are not so strong as men, is it still possible for a woman to protect herself in the face of sudden danger?

If it is possible, what should she do?

These were questions put to Miss [illegible] A. Cameron, instructor of women's classes, at the Brookline Municipal Gymnasium, and to Charles P. Cameron, instructor of men's classes, at the same institution.

"It is possible for a woman to defend herself," replied Instructor [illegible] woman cannot do [illegible] skill and finesse. The old jiu jitsu [illegible] proper defens[illegible] work."

[illegible] Charles Cameron then [illegible] a few general rules. "A [illegible] suddenly confronted, must work very fast. Speed and accuracy are the two absolute essentials for the success of her defense. If she fails in her first comeback, she has failed altogether. A third essential is never to run. Few women [illegible] get away, so flight should be discarded.

"The next general rule is to step [illegible] forward to meet any attack. Don't show fear, however [illegible] you feel it. Fearlessness disarms an opponent, and has a moral advantage. The sort of degenerate who is attacking women in the neighborhood of our city is half [illegible] when his opponent steps forward to meet him.

"Last of all—show no mercy. Put all your strength into your thrust. Jiu jitsu works by leverage. It manipulates the arms and joints of the attacker into such positions that the attacked, though weaker, can break the arm and floor her assailant if she has mastered [illegible] science.

"And most important of [illegible] learn the defensive exercises before the crisis comes. Self-defence has an important place in the physical education of any woman. Don't say 'I'd read these over and remember them.' Do more than that. Practice them! Learn them! You never can tell when you may need them!"

Instructor Cameron then outlined the first defensive position.

Picture shows first defensive position for a woman when attacked by assailant. The woman is blocking a right-hand lead to the face or coat lapel.

This is where the woman parries a blow, delivered from the front, when the assailant aims toward her coat lapel.

"Shoot out your hand so quickly," says he, "that the assailant's wrist is in your grasp and bent outward, paralyzing all his arm muscles, before he has time to ward you off. Any woman weighing 106 pounds, as Miss Cameron, in the picture, can work this defence on a man weighing, as I do, 186, provided she works [illegible]. When the attacking arm is crippled thus no man will work with his [illegible] arm. He's in too much pain from the other. If the assailant is left-handed, as many of them seem to be, the position is reversed, that's all. This is the first defence tactic, which must be followed quickly by the other four, till the opponent is floored."

Plenty of Time

A long-haired man met a little boy, who asked him the time.

"Ten minutes to nine," said the man.

"Well," replied the boy, "at nine o'clock get your hair cut," and he took to his heels and ran, the aggrieved one after him.

Turning a corner the man ran into a policeman, nearly knocking him over.

"What's up?" asked the policeman.

The man, very much out of breath, said,

"You see that young urchin running along there? He asked me the time. I told him, 'ten minutes to nine,' and he said 'at nine o'clock get your hair cut.'"

"Well," said the policeman, glancing at his watch, "what are you running for? You've got eight minutes yet."

Mutual Lassitude.

"Why don't you teach that dog to do some tricks?" "I have tried," replied the man who lacked energy. "The dog won't learn." "Not enough intelligence?" "Too much. I can see by the expression of his face that the dog doesn't see any more sense in the tricks than I do."

SHERMAN

VARIATIONS — Sherman, Shearman, Shearer.

RACIAL ORIGIN — Anglo-Saxon.

SOURCE—An occupation.

THERE is probably no industry which has given us so many family names as that of making woolen cloth, and the reason is that it was England's one great manufacturing industry in the Middle Ages.

Medieval England traded with the world, exporting a great many kinds of agricultural products in return for the skilled handiwork of Venice, Florence, Rouen and a score of other continental cities, and medieval England manufactured many products for home consumption, but woolen cloth was the one industry large enough for export, and it was so large that nearly all Europe wore more or less English cloth.

It was a highly specialized industry, even in the Middle Ages, and there is testimony of this in the fact that there are so many widespread family names today, each representing some specialized step in the process of manufacture. The names of Sherman, Sharman, Shearman and Shearer are an instance.

The original bearers of these names did not shear the sheep. They sheared the finished cloth after the nap had been raised on it by the "teylsers" (which is one source of the name Taylor) and the fullers (who have given us the family name of Fuller) had shrunk and thickened it. The shearers, in short, put on the last finishing touches before the cloth passed into the hands of the tradesmen and the clothing makers.

Old forms of the name are found in the ancient records as "Richard le Sherere," "Robert le Sherman" and "John le Shereman."

Tomorrow—Danzigen.

The Adventures of Ann

By Hal Coffman

CHAPTER XXXV.

ANN and Betty finally got the mysterious woman quieted down. As Betty tip-toed out of the state room and left her, her heart went out to this woman who had once had so much and was now penniless, with youth behind her and a dark future ahead. Betty and Ann talked it over and were for offering to help her until she could get a position. But she was untrained and the chance of her being able to support herself in any way was very slim.

* * * * *

Betty carefully locked the door of their stateroom when they retired. Afterward she was very glad that she had done so, for she heard some one turn the knob of the door during the night. She knew that Harwood was desperate and she would not feel easy in her mind until she had got Ann safely ashore once more.

* * * * *

The story of the mysterious woman had shocked Ann greatly. She thought of Frank and the way she had treated him since her acquaintance with Harwood. The mysterious woman had urged her to think seriously of Frank, though he was poor, and if they married it would be pretty hard to make both ends meet. Ann's head had been turned by the glitter of Harwood's wealth, but it was not too late to profit by the experience of the mysterious woman. All these things she considered the next morning as the big yatch slowly plowed its way back into the harbor they all had left so gaily the day before.

"SAY, what is this anyway, a [illegible] play?" [illegible] "But [illegible] one will kindly keep my wife interested, so she won't [illegible] I'm fat enough [illegible] I'll order a second portion of this duckling. It's great."

There was something like disgust in the look Val flashed at Lane, but the flash modified to languor again as she turned to Shelly and challenged him.

"You mourn your lost lives. I mourn my husband's lost lovely figure," she said scornfully. "I think I'm tempted to send that S. O. S. right now."

The day after Virginia and Pat began life together again as a beautiful climax to my birthday excursion to the old Harrison place, Phoebe and I went over to close Virginia's apartment.

At Dreamwold

For the time Virginia and Pat planned to make their home at the newly christened Dreamwold, and Phoebe was coming to live with Jim and me. So we were going to send Virginia a trunk full of possessions and carry Phoebe's belongings to my apartment.

"I guess you and I might start picking out things for my trousseau—don't you think so, Anne?" asked Phoebe, facing me gaily over a bundle of lingerie she was storing in a drawer of the wardrobe trunk.

"There can't be any objection to that now, except Neal's indifference," I teased.

Whereat Phoebe rushed over to shake me and demand:

"Do you think I love him better than he does me? Do you—do you? Well, you're right; I do, and I'm proud of it—'cause no one could love anyone as much as I do Neal."

The jangle of the telephone right at my elbow prevented reply. I picked up the phone dreading a deluge of congratulations from some one who'd found out about Virginia. A carefully modulated masculine voice greeted me.

"May I speak to Miss Phoebe Harrison?"

Phoebe pantomimed:

Phoebe Has a Talk

"I'm busy. If it isn't Neal, you take the message."

"May I take the message?" I said obediently.

"I must speak to Miss Harrison," replied a voice I now felt sure I recognized.

"This is Anne Harrison, Sheldon," I said. "Phoebe wants me to answer for her."

"This isn't Mr. Ex—Sheldon," came back after a moment of hesitation. "And it's imperative that I speak to Miss Harrison herself."

So I held out the phone to Phoebe and then busied myself with my packing, but stray phrases would come to me:

"Why shouldn't I? . . . Oh, you can't mean that . . . Of course I don't want you to feel desperate . . . It isn't humiliating . . . Really I can't without Neal . . . He trusts me, of course. So does she . . . You misunderstand the whole thing. I'm not pitiless and I want to do what's right and due . . . Well, then I will, but only for an hour . . . Yes, I understand the exact place . . . Yes. Yes, I'll keep my word. Right away . . . Oh, please don't take it like that. I'm coming. I can't do more, can I?"

"Phoebe, what are you going to do?" I demanded, as she hurried over to the window and started putting on her hat.

"I have to chase right out."

"I don't mind a bit, but I want to know one thing. Was that Sheldon Blake phoning?" I demanded.

"Why, you'd know his voice, wouldn't you?" countered Phoebe. "I must rush, Anne, if I'm to keep my appointment and then get back here in time to pack before dinner. I'll take the car, but send Lyons right back."

Before I could question her further Phoebe dashed out, leaving me to disturbed imaginings. What under the sun could Sheldon Blake want of Phoebe that boded any good if it had to be kept a secret from me? And why should Neal's fiancee rush out at Sheldon's bidding? I had to give it up unanswered.

Lyons Gives His Word

As soon as I had packed everything Virginia could conceivably want during the next forty-eight I telephoned for Lyons to come up, and when Amanda reported that he was at the door I explained my plan.

"Mrs. Dalton wishes you to come out tomorrow at the latest, Amanda. But if you can get off now, I don't see why [illegible] shoot you out in the car. I'll have Lyons take the trunk too, and we'll surprise Mrs. Dalton by getting all her precious belongings to her quickly."

"Bless your kind heart, Miss Harrison, you know how I feel about my dear lady—and how glad I am that she's [illegible] once more," replied the woman. "And maybe the ride in the new [illegible] car I seen from the window won't be a treat! I could be ready in half an hour, but it isn't fair to leave you any work."

"I'll have Hedwig over in the morning," I replied. "Now run and ask Lyons to come in, please, and then you may have an hour to get ready if you need it."

What Happened When Man and Woman Broke Laws of the Social Code

By Cosmo Hamilton

While the fun-loving members of the Quaker Hill [illegible] set were discussing their emotions out at the clubhouse, hardly out [illegible] the ring of the [illegible] Bob Meredith was sitting in judgment on his lifelong friend, Julian Osborn, who had ravished Meredith's home. Julian guilty and [illegible] that, believing his [illegible] bearing its end, confesses all in his attempt [illegible] Bob's wife of blame.

CHAPTER XX.—Continued

THEY settled within sight of each other's homes on the high ridge of Quaker Hill, went to the same trains and generally lunched together in the same restaurant. And God the impossible things that come almost daily into the lives of God's creatures! No one that seemed to be the most utterly impossible was anything in the nature of a break in the fine and splendid friendship of these two men. Not a day slipped off the calendar that did not bring upheavals and revelations, changes and revolutions. Among them all, however, the relations between Bob and Julian remained firm and packlike and apparently eternal. In the disappointments and disillusions which both were inevitably asked to face they renewed their faith in humanity and their courage to deal with the struggle to live in the light of each other's eyes. And then, to the everlasting shame of a cynically minded Fate, that no idle evening came when Margaret and Julian discovered that even loyalty and lifelong friendship could do nothing under the onrush of passion that Nature, which pays no heed to the laws of morality and the codes of civilization, was too strong to resist.

Trading with an excitement which made them catch their breath at the sight of one another and caused them to walk as people do in the dark, they played with the situation, and flirted with the danger like moths flapping about a glowing flame.

There were [illegible] whole hours even, during these [illegible] when one or the other turned cold and looked at the figures of Bob and Daisy and the boy through the right end of the telescope. To their credit it must be said that now, then once they put up an hysterical fight against the urge that was in them, and cried out to whatever God they hoped there was to send them out of the main current that was speeding them into the sea and into one which would carry them once more into the safe and pleasant backwater of which they had become accustomed. But when they met next day the spark of passion flared and blinded them and the power to fight went limp and died. Finally, sacrificing on the altar of decency, self-respect and all that they owed to wife and husband, came the stolen visit to Baltimore, followed by the discovery by Daisy, the case in Court, the appalling awakening, the return to Quaker Hill, and the anxious hope, renewed again and again, that every day piled upon the day preceding might eventually bury the truth from poor old Bob beneath an immovable mound.

Truth Alone Remains

But whatever else may die and disappear, truth alone remains. Earth, however barren and neglected, catches its seed, nourishes its roots, brings out its blossom, and the unsuspecting breeze captures the pollen from the little heart and blows it into the soul of man.

Bob had been told, and it was in character with the queer irony of life that it now fell to Julian to find him in his agony. Leaving his wife and Margaret and the group of loyal friends who had tried so hard to keep the ins[illegible] chief-maker away from Bob, Julian recrossed the road. His car was among the phalanx of automobiles parked to the left of the Country Club. Light streamed from all the windows of the building and the quiet air quivered under the strident sounds of the band in the ballroom. The man in charge of the drum and the rest of his West African instruments of torture was using them all in an ecstasy of lunacy. The notes of the blatant cornet shattered the magic of the night. It seemed to Julian to be a profane and fantastic To Deum on the death of a friendship.

Getting into his car he left the hideous sounds behind him and drove along a well-wooded road beneath the branches of noiseless trees. He knew instinctively that Bob had crept like a wounded dog to its kennel and that he would find him alone in the den to which he took his work and his anxieties and sat among the memories of his youth to grapple with the problems of his business. There was a light in the well-known window when he ran the car up the hill and brought it to a stand-still in front of the house, which was indeed a homestead, from which he had stolen the wife of his friend. The lower rooms were in darkness except for a gleam in the hall. The main door was open and without a moment's hesitation Julian went in. On an old carved chest beneath the stairs a scarf had been flung which he recognized as one that Margaret had worn at Baltimore. Sitting beside it, in what seemed to Julian to be an attitude of guardianship, was a large Teddy bear.

"Too late," he thought, as he caught the beady eyes. "The damage has been done, old man." And he paused for a moment in a place inside all the more familiar to him than with many of the prints that he had helped to collect and looked about him with a poignant sense of pain. Under the lamp was a picture of dunes and sea, and back into his mind flashed the long-forgotten figure of a sturdy, honest boy with unruly hair and a look of hero-worship in his eyes, friend that stickeld closer than a brother.

He went upstairs, opened the door of the den and shut it behind him. Within a few yards of him, all crumpled in his chair, sat a man who had been struck by lightning.

In a deathly silence, broken not so much as by the patient tickling of a clock, Julian had stood at the open grave of his father or under the whispering arches of a great Cathedral, that some day he, like the rest of us, must ultimately stand, without a ray of authorityze, before the Judgment seat. He would rather have done so then, being dead, than see the look in the eyes of his friend that he knew must come. And as he waited, aware of the position and the subject of every picture on the walls and of the photographs of himself in all the various stages of his youth and manhood, he knew that he was to be called upon, for the first time in his life, to be as honest as this most honest man, that he could bring to his aid, by way of apology, some of the brilliant inventiveness of which he was an expert. No longer was he the master spirit, the captain and the leader who, with the old touch of patronage, was there to issue instructions to his trusting lieutenant. All that was gone forever. He was now the humble, contrite man, discovered in a mean and disloyal action which had staggered the great friendships of the world.

But the Look Didn't Come

But the look didn't come. When at last Bob moved it was to get up stiffly, unlock a drawer in the bureau, put a revolver away in it in the middle of the room and go with sort of lurch to the window. He neither [illegible] nor spoke, but stood, as though his action explained itself, with his back to the man who he had followed without question, loved as well as only to his wife and trusted to the ultimate [illegible] of faith.

If an earthquake had tilted the house like a [illegible] at on a rough sea, it would not have given a great a shock to Julian as the sight of that revolver in the handsome Julian to whom life had been a smooth and easy business, who self-made snares he had invariably avoided by charm of manner, sudden inspiration and [illegible] most amazing luck. With a sudden [illegible] of heart he realized that he was expected to pay for disloyalty in the one way [illegible] to Bob. He knew, without argument, that in order to live up to the last poor remnants of his friend's respect [illegible] must go out quietly, put the revolver in [illegible] mouth and send himself into whatever future awaited him. * * * He would do it, of course. Tradition, breeding and pride demanded this. But [illegible] disavowed friendship,—he could at least live up to [illegible]. But * * * good God, there were all the splendid years that he must leave, all the plans, ambitions, pleasures and [illegible] that he could never fulfill. There were Daisy's grief, the jeers of the people who had [illegible] made to look small by him, the [illegible] of his enemies, the sudden sense of fright at the knowledge that he was going on a one-way ticket into uncertainty,—the sight of himself cut clear as in a photograph, lying out under trees damaged and unbeautiful. * * *

He went to the table and with an icy hand picked up the revolver, his imagination running before him to a solitary place of which he had often thrown a careless glance [illegible] to the fifth tee, where trees hung [illegible] a sluggish stream bordered with [illegible] than once he thought had [illegible] mind that death, with its burden [illegible] cross those stepping-stones at [illegible]

Five More Blossoms from New England's Garden of Intellectual Loveliness

MISS WINIFRED WILSON, Roxbury

MRS. ELIZABETH C. EARL, Medford

MISS MINNIE GILMAN, Springfield

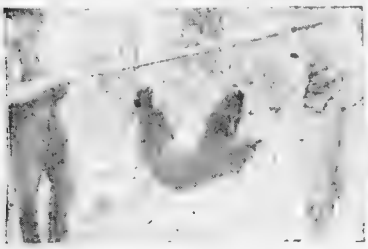
MISS VERA E. HARFF, Dorchester

MISS KATHRYN E. GOLDIN, Lexington

STILL THEY POUR IN—Each succeeding mail brings to the office of the "Loveliest Girl Editor," at the Boston American, more armfuls of photographs of New England's intellectual loveliness. Yet the experts are not nearly appeased in their appetites. There are thousands of girls in New England qualified for consideration when it comes to awarding the $5,000 in prizes. And what is the matter with Boston? All of the five young ladies whose pictures are reproduced above are from other New England towns and cities. We all know that Boston has countless beautiful girls of the type desired. One has but to walk down town during the day or go to the theatre at night to become convinced of this. Today the "Loveliest Girl Editor" went to a department store on an errand for his sister. Back of one of the counters was one of the most beautiful girls he had ever seen. And her face glowed with real intellect. Perhaps you know her. If you do, for goodness sake see that her photograph is entered! Remember, $5,000 in gold awaits the winners. Send in that photograph today. Address all photographs to the "Loveliest Girl Editor," Boston American, No. 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass

SINGS TO A WHOLE FLEET—Miss Mabelle Burch, brilliant young coloratura, has a brother who is a "gob" on the Submarine F-2. She requested permission to sing to him by wireless telephone. Navy officers are noted for their courtesy and deference to women, especially to charming young ladies of talent. Hence, work throughout the fleet was stopped the other day while two Admirals and the entire radio force "listened in" on the novel concert. The above pictures show, left to right: Rear Admiral N. C. Twining, chief of staff; Miss Burch and Admiral Hugh Rodman, the latter in his cabin aboard the flagship New Mexico. Note that Admiral Rodman is sharing the treat with his dog.

HIGHEST PAID SPEAKER—Elizabeth Gulick, the eight-year-old girl who says a 69-word piece in "Daddy Dumplin'," gets $75 for each week's work of eight performances. (c) International



IT'S A BEAR, IT'S A BEAR—The husky young bruin will become a resident of some park zoo. He would much rather stay with his mother in the Maine woods. If Ma Bruin ever gets a flash at her offspring being carted off the two cookies carrying the pole are very apt to [illegible]

WEST COAST DEFENSE—The 14-inch toy above is located at Fort McArthur, California. She is firing at a moving target six miles out to sea. Some pistol!

KILLED WHEN PLANE COLLAPSES—Frances E. Lee, the only Chinese aviatrix, fell to her death in California with John Courtney in the latter's home-made monoplane. (c) International

EYES ALOFT, BOYS—This picture was taken at a millinery style show. How the officials ever expected anyone to see the hats is beyond understanding. Remember the metal hats the doughboys wore? Some of these creations are made of metallic cloth. It will take doughboys to produce them, too, believe me, John Henry Pettigrew. Millionaire millinery. (c) International MAKES LONG FLIGHT—The above picture, taken just before the start of the Gordon Bennett international balloon race, shows the Italian war balloon Trionfale in the foreground. The Italian gas bag left the ground at Birmingham, Ala., Saturday afternoon and landed at Mount Clemens, Mich., Monday. There is always something fascinating about a balloon race, due to the fact that the bags are so largely at the mercy of the elements. The Trionfale was used to bombard the Austrian port of Pola during the war. —(c) Underwood & Underwood.

THE TAIL OF A ROOSTER—Eighteen feet of it. Japanese on the island of Shikoku, long before the theory of evolution had been heard of, undertook to breed roosters with long tails. The birds thus developed are kept in cages so narrow they cannot turn around. Once a day they are taken out and allowed to stretch. —(c) Underwood & Underwood.

JUST ROAMIN' 'ROUND!—This French gypsy and his little donkey just naturally amble about as fancy suggests. Everyone considers the gypsies strange people. But the gypsies just smile. They know we are all more or less gypsies at heart. The French gypsies came originally from Hindustan and still retain the traits of the Hindoos. —(c) International.

CHICAGO MAN PREDICTS BIG BUILDING BOOM

Frederick H. Bartlett of Chicago predicts a building boom that will last from seven to nine years and be the biggest this country has ever known. He said:

"Real estate business during the war was at a standstill. Real estate is the last thing up and the first thing down. In cities like Chicago it goes up stage, stays there a long time, and then, as a rule, goes up.

"For the first time in ten or twelve years, buildings are bringing a reasonable return on investment. Of all money loaned in United States 50 per cent. is secured by real estate. During the war 6 per cent. real estate mortgage bonds never sold below par. When the real estate boom comes, it will come 'quickly.'"

LOW QUOTATIONS FAIL TO SELL COPPER

Copper is being quoted as low as 15 cents a pound delivered, or 14¾ refinery, to inquiring consumers, but the low price is failing to induce buying. Leading selling agencies are out of the market.

There is a large amount of metal on hand. Copper reclaimed in this country from new and old scrap within a year totaled 574,000,000 pounds, according to government figures. Imports exceeded exports by about 9000 tons.

To Havana by Air

According to a New York announcement the Aeromarine West Indies Airways, Inc., will begin on Monday next a passenger line service between Key West and Havana. The air fleet or flock will comprise six aero cabin flying boats, each carrying eleven passengers. The company has a contract to carry first class mail also. Daily service is intended.

Are Railroad Stocks Selling Too High?

Ever since the increased freight rates went into effect, the rails listed on the New York Stock Exchange have been advancing, and many people are wondering how much further they will go.

This is an interesting question, and its answer is governed by the ability of the roads as a whole to operate profitably under existing conditions. And the outlook in this connection is summed up in an article appearing in our

RAILS RALLY IN SECOND HOUR

Oils and Steels Also Improve During the Morning; Trading Is Quiet

By W. H. ROSS.

Stocks ruled strong in New York at noon, but prices were then a little below the morning highest. The market was strongest in the second hour, rails being the leaders. Among issues to show the largest gains were Standard Oil of New Jersey, Mexican Petroleum, Bosch Magneto, Sumatra, Kansas City Southern, Reading, Southern Pacific and Union Pacific. Trading was rather quiet on the advance. First hour transactions totaled less than 140,000 shares.

Call money opened at 9 per cent. There was little alteration in foreign exchange, opening quotations being demand sterling $3.45¼, off ⅛ cent; francs $.0612, up $.0002; lire $.0375, up $.0002; marks $.0127, off $.0006.

BETTER TONE AT OPENING.

While the market had a better tone at the opening the improvement was brief. It was again found that offerings exceeded demands and prices began to ease off. Within a few minutes the list was irregular and the tone heavy. Rails were under the most pressure. Reports as to September and October earnings by carriers showed increases as a rule, but they were not up to the expectations fostered by higher rates. Roads are feeling the slowing down of trade and industry. When less goods are being manufactured and sold there must be a decrease in shipments. American Zinc opened at its lowest in two years and soon declined to a figure not touched since 1913. New Orleans, Texas & Mexico advanced to a 1920 high, being an exception among rails. Before an hour was over there was better buying and symptoms of a rally developed.

MIXED PRICE MOVEMENT.

Oils, steels, motors and coppers were mixed as to movement at the start but a little higher on the average. The contrary was true of rails and equipments. Standard Oil of New Jersey opened nine points higher, which was the largest gain. Atlantic Gulf was off three on its initial sale and this was the largest loss. United Fruit began by advancing more than a point, but reacted and soon showed more than two loss. Trading continued to be professional in character. As a rule the weakness of the market this week is attributed to the high call rate and the downward trend of commodity prices. Dividend passing is causing concern on the part of investors. Reductions also are predicted by the bear crowd. Smaller earnings by most industrial corporations are not calculated to increase the market value of their securities. The settlement of the British coal strike, if miners accept the terms, had no apparent effect upon the stock market.

Active and Idle Spindles

The Census Bureau reports that on Oct. 1 in this country there were in operation 1,282,204 woolen spindles and 1,722,396 worsted spindles. There were idle 975,578 of the former and 606,000 of the latter.

TONE IS FIRM IN BOSTON

Market Opens With Gains the Rule; Curb Trend is Indefinite as Usual

The Boston market displayed strength at the outset, gains predominating and the tone being much better. Most of the early activity was in Bigheart, National Leather and Swift International. Bigheart opened low but recovered. National Leather began higher but reacted. Swift International started lower and continued weak. The price range was narrow, United Fruit making the largest gain. It started with an advance of three points, making the gain on a small sale. Rails were firm and quiet. Coppers remained inactive and irregular. Osceola began with a point gain. Western selling of Swift International is held accountable for the decline. The market lacked breadth during the morning and was not as strong at the end of the first hour as at the beginning. The reverse was true of New York.

Among issues to make small gains were American Telephone, Boston & Maine, Copper Range, Davis-Daly, Ventura, Swift & Co. and Utah Metals, while fractional losses were recorded for Massachusetts Gas, Island Oil, Seneca and Agricultural Chemical.

CURB BEGAN WITH GAINS.

The Curb market showed strength at the outset, but developed its usual phase, which is irregularity, before the morning was over. Trading was active at the beginning, but became quiet later. Early leaders were Arizona Tip Top, Eureka, Boston & Montana, Crystal and Merrimac Development. Among those to open with advances were Arizona Silver, Tip Top, Bagdad, Hecla Divide, Mutual and Nixon Nevada. Weak stocks at the start were Albany Divide, Eureka, Merrimac and Eagle and Bluebell.

At the end of an hour Eureka was off 4 cents at 41 cents, Boston & Montana 1 cent at 41 cents, Crystal 4 cents at 51 cents, Merrimac 4 cents at 36 cents and Allied Mining 1 cent at 26 cents. Albany was up 2 cents at 75 cents, Bagdad 5 cents at 27 cents and Mutual 4 cents at 44 cents. Tip Top had lost its gain.

No Piggly Wiggly Dividend

The Chicago Stock Exchange has been notified by Piggly Wiggly Stores, Inc., that dividends are suspended on class "A" stock, which is entitled to $4 per annum cumulative, on account of violent fluctuations in prices, rapid business expansion and the desirability of building strong cash reserve. The company's 325 stores did over $3,200,000 business in September and it is expected that dividends will be resumed after the first of the year.

New York Sub-Treasury Loss

New York, Oct. 29.—The sub-treasury lost $189,000 to the banks on Thursday, making the cash net loss since Friday of $384,000.

Up to the end of fifteen minutes the market showed little important change from first levels. Opening prices were: December, 21.25; January, 20.80; March, 20.60; April, 20.65; May, 20.60; July, 20.20.

FORMER BOSTON MAN ROBBED OF $3,000

Baltimore, Oct. 29.—The home of Charles D. Emmons, at No. 8 Club road, president of the United Railway & Electric Company and former Boston resident, was robbed of cash and jewels valued at $3,000 by porch-climbers.

A Chicago Board of Trade man reports after a visit to Oklahoma that corn is selling there at fifty cents a bushel and coton is so cheap that tenant farmers are turning crops over to landlords.

VORENBERG FOR LESS PROFITS

Boston Merchant Urges Maine Retailers to Organize Fairer Laws and Conditions

Portland, Me., Oct. 29.—Less profits and more organization were the keynotes of the talk given at the dinner of the Portland Retail Merchants Association at the Lafayette Hotel by Felix Vorenberg, of Gilchrist Company, Boston. Mr. Vorenberg said that the merchants must content themselves with less profits than they have been making, and urged an organization of retailers all over the country in effect much like the American Federation of Labor.

"You must organize to secure legislation," declared Mr. Vorenberg, "don't wait until the laws are made, and then find fault and criticise. Organize, and endeavor to have the Legislature pass laws that will help business, and make it fair both for the merchant and the consumer."

Mr. Vorenberg then outlined in detail the progress and the purpose of the proposed national movement to organize the retail merchants into one body that shall become large enough to be effective.

The speaker explained an even more ambitious plan based much upon the form of organization of the American Federation of Labor, which he said would be called "The National Council for Retail Merchants Associations." This would in effect include the dry goods merchants, the tailors, the garment makers, the milliners and others yet to be included.

"If 60,000 of the 80,000 merchants in this country could be gathered together into this body, it would be an organization well worth reckoning with, and its work would be very effective," said Mr. Vorenberg.

"The responsibility of the merchant is due first, to himself and his family; second, to his country, which includes his State and city also, and lastly, to his fellow clerks, or, as they say at Gilchrist's, the working partners of the merchants.

"The responsibility divides itself around these three and includes numerous features. For instance in the troublous times now ahead, the merchants must be contented with less profits. They must prepare for these by cutting down their orders and reducing their stocks, especially of high priced goods. It may be that some of the goods in stock have cost from 15 to 30 per cent. more than they sell for now, but the general public can't be made to see this."

"There is a great cry of profiteering abroad in the land," remarked the speaker seriously, "and it is necessary to take the public into your confidence, in order that some of the truth at least may be given out to them."

August Gasoline Production

August refinery production of gasoline in this country was the largest for the year up to that month, amounting to 444,141,422 gallons, an increase of 20,721,652 over the July output.

$30,000,000

Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company

Seven Per Cent. Gold Bonds

Due May 1, 1931

Interest payable May 1 and November 1. Coupon bonds in denominations of $1,000 and $500 with privilege of registration as to principal and exchangeable for bonds registered as to both principal and interest. Fully registered bonds re-exchangeable for coupon bonds. Principal and interest payable without deduction for any tax or taxes (other than Income Taxes exceeding in the aggregate 2% per annum) which the Company or the Trustee may be required to pay or to retain therefrom under any present or future law of the United States of America, or of any State, County, Municipality or other taxing authority therein.

The Bonds will be redeemable as a whole, but not in part, at the option of the Company, on notice as provided in the Indenture, on May 1, 1926, or on any semi-annual interest date thereafter at their principal amount and accrued interest, together with a premium equal to one-half per cent. of their principal amount for every six months intervening between the date so fixed for redemption and the date of maturity.

Guy E. Tripp, Esq., Chairman of the Board of Directors of Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, in a letter to undersigned, dated October 27, 1920, writes in part as follows:

"The purpose of this issue is to secure working capital for a fixed period, and the proceeds of the sale of the Bonds is to be applied to the payment of Notes Payable.

The Bonds are to be issued under an Indenture to be made by the Company to Central Union Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, which will provide that the Company (including its Proprietary Companies as defined in the Indenture) shall at all times, while the Bonds are outstanding have unpledged current assets equal to at least one and one-half times the total indebtedness of the Company and of its Proprietary Companies (excluding the outstanding $6,275,000, principal amount, Westinghouse Machine Company First and Refunding Mortgage Bonds, which are secured by mortgage), all as defined in the Indenture. The Indenture will further provide that the Company will not while any of the Bonds are outstanding make or permit to be made any mortgage on any of its real property or plants or on any of the real property or plants of any of its Proprietary Companies (other than purchase money mortgages) unless such mortgage shall secure the Bonds pari passu with the other indebtedness secured thereby.

The large current volume of the business of the Company is reflected in the Sales Billed which, for the six months ended September 30, 1920, amounted to $78,771,675, and which it is believed will for the fiscal year to end March 31, 1921, exceed the Sales Billed for the previous fiscal year. The aggregate income of the Company and of its Proprietary Companies, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1920 (after deductions for depreciations, Federal and other taxes, etc.) applicable to interest charges, amounted to $16,801,164, or more than ten and one-half times such charges, which, for that fiscal year, amounted to $1,594,823. Such income for the six months ended September 30, 1920, after like deductions, amounted to $8,164,875, while such charges for that period amounted to $751,852.

As of September 30, 1920, the current assets of the Company amounted to $128,630,880, while the current indebtedness, consisting mainly of Accounts Payable, not due, advance payments on contracts and accruals for interest, Federal and other taxes, after applying as of said date the proceeds of the sale of the Bonds, amounted to $31,112,486. The only other indebtedness will be this issue of $30,000,000 Bonds and $6,342,500, consisting almost entirely of Westinghouse Machine Company First and Refunding Mortgage Bonds, due 1940. The Capital Stock of the Company, now paying 8% dividends per annum, amounts to $74,812,650 par value, having a market value at present quotations in excess of $70,000,000.

The issue of the Bonds and their sale to you is subject to favorable action by the stockholders of the Company upon a proposed increase in the indebtedness of the Company at their special meeting heretofore called to be held on November 18 next.

The form of the Bonds and the provisions of the Indenture under which they are to be issued shall be subject to your approval, and all legal proceedings for the creation thereof shall be subject to the approval of your counsel.

Pending the preparation of Definitive Bonds, Temporary Bonds will be issued.

Application will be made in due course to list the Bonds on the New York Stock Exchange."

The undersigned will receive subscriptions for the above Bonds, subject to allotment, at 94¾% and accrued interest to date of delivery, at which price the Bonds will yield about 7¾% on the investment if held to maturity.

Payment for Bonds allotted is to be made at the office of the undersigned against delivery of temporary Bonds, deliverable if, when and as issued and received by them. The right is reserved to reject any application in whole or in part.

New York, October 29, 1920.

KUHN, LOEB & CO.

All the above Bonds having been sold this advertisement appears as a matter of record only.

WITH THE AIR MEN

By C. W. JACOBY,
Formerly of the Government Air Service.

THE world's largest airplane is undergoing trials in Germany, preparatory to an attempt to fly to the United States. It is a monoplane, constructed entirely from steel and aluminum, and is designed on the lines of the Fokker. It is equipped with four engines, each developing 250 horse power, and, it is believed, will be able to make a new world's record for speed—250 miles per hour.

It will accommodate eighteen passengers, two pilots and two mechanics. Six days' continuous running test is being made with the motor.

* * *

FIREPROOF airplanes have been tested at Hazelhurst Field, and by the adoption of new methods just perfected, airplane pilots will be assured of safety from fire when flying. During the flight displays of fireworks were carried, and on the axles of the landing gear were placed a number of magnesium sprays which illuminated the field. The plane was apparently in flames, and it is said that the heat was so intense that it melted eight inch aluminum, but the linen and wood of the airplane was not even blistered.

This demonstration took place at an altitude of 3000 feet, and after landing, gasoline was poured on the wings and rudder and set afire. This burned with an intense flame but did no damage to the fabric.

GERMANY'S request of the Inter-Allied Commission, received at Washington, for permission to construct two giant airships for use in international trade between Germany and the United States, has been temporarily refused. Germany wished to retain a certain proportion of airplane, seaplane and airship stations for use in international and interstate traffic. There are said to be approximately 600 public and private stations, of which the Germans hoped to retain about 20 per cent.

* * *

GENERAL MITCHELL of the Air Service says: "With proper organization we could make accurate survey of the entire country from the air in three years." In his statement regarding the possibilities in the field of aerial photography, we learn that the Air Service has a camera with a 20-inch focal length lens, capable of taking photographs up to 25,000 feet, and which has a film roll of 90 pictures. A special instrument controls it and keeps it flat by uniform air pressure.

* * *

THE largest number ever carried by an airplane with a single motor flew over New York City the other day. This plane broke all known records for useful load capacity, carrying 3,500 pounds, or 8.75 pounds per horse power. The lifting power displayed marks a new advance in airplane efficiency, and in the opinion of experts who witnessed the demonstrations is highly significant. It brings appreciably closer the day of economical air transportation of freight at a speed of upwards of 100 miles per hour.

* * *

COMMERCIAL aviation is steadily gaining the confidence of the public, and is destined to be one of the great industries of the future. Death-defying exhibitions are being classed with dare-devil automobile racing, and are no longer encouraged by the public, in fact, such performances as flying at low levels over large gatherings, such as football and other games, is forbidden by the highway commission, which board is at the present time taking the proper steps to eliminate all such menaces to public safety.

ONE of the largest lumber firms, whose timber limits cover an area of more than 8,000 miles square, scattered throughout the eastern part of the Province of Quebec, has secured airplanes to act as patrols and obtain aerial photographs. This air service will be staffed entirely with officers of the Royal Flying Corps.

* * *

AS a result of patrols maintained by naval seaplanes, Chesapeake Bay fishermen are making the biggest hauls of fish on record.

* * *

MLLE. ROLAND has at last succeeded in her ambition to fly across the English channel. She has not the distinction of being the first woman to do this, this belonging to the late Miss Harriet Quimby, an American pilot, in pre-war days.

Booing Harvard at Football Games Ill-Bred Practice

Our Mr. Parker, reporting the game between Harvard and Centre College, calls attention to a fact that has been rather disagreeably noticeable for a long time. A large element of the spectators as distinguished from the student body manifested a most unpleasant and ill-bred hostility toward the Harvard team.

Mr. Parker observes that they applauded Centre not so much because they loved Centre more, but Harvard less, and he supports this conclusion by citing the fact that when any penalty was imposed upon Harvard or anything happened that was disagreeable to Harvard, the applause was just as great as it was for the achievements of Harvard's opponents.

Now, Harvard is a home team. She is one of our greatest Massachusetts institutions. She is imbedded even in the Constitution of Massachusetts. The founding of Harvard was one of the first great works of our earliest forefathers. She has never failed us in any of our great crises.

Much of the ill-feeling toward Harvard by those in the neighborhood of Harvard who have not attended the university, arises out of the assumption that Harvard is reactionary and snobbish—particularly in her athletic sports.

There was a brief period in Harvard's career, some twenty years back, when this might have been said with considerable truth. But Harvard paid the bill in full by a long series of humiliating defeats and she learned that she could not play her hothouse plants and society men against teams from Yale and elsewhere, selected upon a democratic basis. For many years now she has abandoned that old folly.

And it must not be forgotten that at no great crisis of American history has Harvard failed the nation. During the Revolution when those of wealth and position among the colonies were all "Loyalists" or "Tories," it was before the president of Harvard that our patriotic forefathers knelt on the college grounds at midnight to hear him say the prayer for victory, before they marched to Bunker Hill. It must not be forgotten that before our Civil War the influential, financial element of New England sympathized with the slave holders and was very much against the anti-slave agitators. If anybody doubts where Harvard was in the Civil War, let him go to Memorial Hall in Cambridge and look at the list of dead and wounded and at the list of those Harvard students and alumni which fought to preserve the Union. In no institution of any character, we venture to say, was the percentage greater of those qualified to serve who served. It was the same in the Spanish War and in this last war.

Harvard students have never been lacking in sportsmanship and in willingness to respect a visiting team.

Therefore, there is no need to teach the Harvard students sportsmanship by overdoing the applause to the visiting teams and by showing a mean spirit toward Harvard.

Let Tobacco Alone, W.C.T.U.! Attend to Prohibition

The Women's Christian Temperance Union will have all it can do to prevent the overthrow of prohibition by failure to enforce it.

We have no doubt that there is a big conspiracy to prevent the enforcement of prohibition so that an argument can be made that it is inherently unenforceable. This is not true and the women of the State under the leadership of the Women's Christian Temperance Union can demonstrate that it is not true by enforcing the law.

Let them attend to this business and let tobacco alone. The irresponsible talk of one of their members against tobacco reminds one very much of the dog who dropped the bone from his mouth to grab at the shadow of the bone which he saw reflected in the water and then saw the real bone sink out of sight.

On the other hand, it would be well for tobacco men not to make the mistake that the beer men with respect to whiskey made and get themselves tied up with the liquor interests through any fear or threats. The effects of tobacco are entirely different from the effects of liquor and are not anti-social in the same sense. A crusade against tobacco would be ridiculous.

Save the Forests! Hunters Can Contribute, Too

The Fish and Game Commission was exceedingly well advised to suspend the hunting privilege during the dry season. The protection of our forests from fire is absolutely the first consideration. It is an object of far greater importance than most of our people realize.

One of the greatest, most barbarous wastes of which the American people have been guilty by mal-feasance and non-feasance has been the ruthless, reckless, unnecessary destruction of our forests. Our dissipation of the resources which bounteous nature has heaped upon us cries to heaven. The first great object of that conservation which we must soon undertake must be the replanting of the trees we have felled and the rebuilding of our forests.

This cannot be done unless we stop the destruction by fire. Smoking by hunters in the woods can be stopped if this is a fruitful source of fire.

A League of Nations

And an International Court

Copyright, 1920, Star Company.

When you go to an American court, the judge decides between YOU and your opponent.

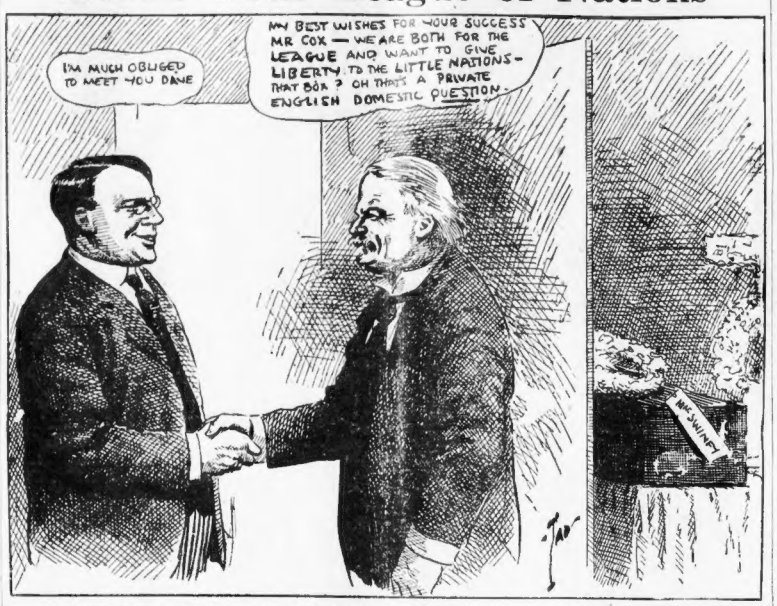
He tells you what you may or may not do. He tells you that you must not beat Jones, you must not rob Smith. He does not say to you, "Down in the slums foreign men are fighting each other with knives and guns. I want you to go down there to fight and get stabbed or shot."

In other words, a court tells you when you are right or wrong. It does not order you to go and settle quarrels and thievery with which you have nothing to do.

The League of Nations would not only pass on the acts of the United States—it would also order the United States, with its men and money, to mix up in other people's quarrels.

An international court would decide the right and wrong between two nations. It would not, and could not, make this country responsible for the crimes of others—which is exactly what the League of Nations would do.

Here's Your League of Nations



This cartoon shows you what you vote for if you vote for the League. It is called a League to allow little nations the privilege of self-determination, which is the right to be free and govern themselves. Mr. MacSwiney believed in that, and this picture shows where he is.

The League of Nations is a blanket insurance policy planned to make the United States use its men and money under orders of a council controlled by England.

If there were any sincerity in the League of Nations or in "self determination" for little nations, Ireland would not be at war and MacSwiney would not be in his coffin.

A very able statesman is Lloyd George, who wants Cox's election. But, if he had been a little wiser, he would have prevented the publication of such a picture as this a week before the election that interests him and he would not have allowed MacSwiney to starve to death.

More Truth Than Poetry

Strong for the Flag

By S. E. KISER

WHILE he was in his teens he stole some hardware from a store;
He tried, they say, to pick the lock on Baker's cellar door;
He robbed his mother of her dimes and pawned his sister's rings;
He's had to hide a hundred times for doing lawless things.
It's very easy now and then to catch him in a lie,
But you should hear him cheering when he sees the flag go by.

WHILE still a boy he stole a watch and tried to "shove the queer";
He played the gold brick game a while and served the State a year;
He used to cheat at cards, they say, and tried to rob a bank,
But that, we must remember, may have been a youthful prank.
For when our anthem's played or sung he sees through moistened eyes,
And he is proud to be among the first who start to rise.

HE broke his father's heart and sent his mother to her grave;
Where change lies loose he cannot seem to make his hands behave.
One day he faced a dozen men who thought him much to blame
For being careless with a pen and with his uncle's name;
But please remember always that, despite his love of swag,
He never fails to raise his hat in honor of the flag.

HE dodged the draft by hook and crook, pretending to be sick,
And never fails to overlook a pocket he may pick.
But once he nearly killed a man who didn't seem to think
This country could lick all the rest, and do it in a wink.
Policemen chase him now and then for being indiscreet,
But you should hear him cheering when the flag goes up the street.

BLIGHTED HOPES

YOU NEVER CAN TELL IN THESE DAYS

"My gosh!" he exclaimed. "I didn't know I'd done anything for which they could deport me."

Deep Woods Scientist Tells the World About Eels

THIS IS AN EEL

Our piscatorial expert started something the other day when he let it be known the origin of the eel is a scientific mystery.

This information appeared in one of the "ears" of the Magazine Page. Ears are those little boxes tucked up in the corner of newspaper pages. The ear referred to was headed, "The Mysterious Eel." It imparted to a waiting world the startling fact that "no spawning eel has ever been seen."

Out of the Maine woods, where most of the newsprint paper comes from, has come to the Magazine Editor the startling explanation of how eels originate. And to the discoverer let all honor and credit be paid. He signs himself "D. M. S." and claims to hail from Millinocket. But let him tell his own story in his own way:

"Would you believe that every eel is formed from a hair of a horse's tail?" he asks. We unhesitatingly answer, "No, we wouldn't." But we'll take a chance on anything once, so here's what we were asked to accept:

"Ludicrous, no doubt, it sounds," continues "D. M. S." "But anyone who does not consider it too ludicrous to be within the range of possibility has the advantage that he can test it as often as he likes without the danger of detection."

Here's a case of "open covenants openly arrived at" and no danger of breaking the game laws.

"I was about fourteen years old," says Mr. D. M. S., "when I first heard the strange story (I am now thirty-six), and for weeks afterwards my favorite pastime was pulling hairs from a horse's tail, putting them in water and watching them come alive." Lie still, Munchausen, lie still!

"It is supposed to take nine days, but I have seen them show signs of life long before that time."

OBSERVE THESE DIRECTIONS CAREFULLY.—"The hair has to be pulled from the root, and the root becomes the head of the eel. Shortly after being put in the water the hair begins to turn white and later the color of an eel, and by the end of nine days it is fully capable of functioning as a live eel."

"You say the theory is that eels vanish at intervals into the sea to breed. Now, supposing this to be the case," queries D. M. S., "how could eels be found in places dozens of miles from the sea, in places where they could get only by climbing cataracts and steep places, and it is doubtful if an eel was ever seen swimming against the current of a stream, much less going up cataracts"

"Another wonderful thing about the newly-formed eel," continues D. M. S., in his best vein, "is that if you hold it in your hand with the head hanging downward and say, 'Eel, put up your knot and I'll let you go,' it immediately forms itself into a knot. I did not, however, experiment long enough to be able to say positively whether or not it continues to do this after it finds the promise has not been kept."

There—you have the story at last, just as it was written to us. Perhaps you feel like forming an eel club, getting hairs from horse's tails and producing eels.

Which reminds us of our first, last and only acquaintance with a member of the eel family. He or she, begging her pardon, came into our boat securely attached to the pout hook on the end of our line. Whereat, we abruptly, and perhaps rudely, went right out over the other side of the boat into the all-embracing water and proceeded to remain there until the eel went home to its mamma.

And if D. M. S. of Millinocket, Me., thinks he's going to get the Magazine Editor up there to watch this eel experiment he's got another guess. Besides, the editor is of Irish extraction, and eels and snakes never did love the Irish.

IRELAND'S TROUBLES AS SEEN BY JEW

By Damon Runyon.

Copyright, 1920, by Star Company.

"Strangers here must be very careful as to remarks, as one never knows who one is talking to. Something wrongly said may mean a bullet from an unknown source."

WRITING from Belfast, Ireland, under date of September 16, a New Yorker scribbled the above on the margin of his letter.

This New Yorker is a well-known Jew, who originated on the lower East Side.

He is not an erudite man, but he is an observing one. He has been traveling in Ireland for some time, and his letter is to George Whiting, an Irishman and a member of the theatrical team of Whiting and Burt.

His letter tells something of conditions in Ireland as seen by an impartial observer.

It sounds like a description of a country held by the Germans during the late war.

The writer says:

"On entering the country, everybody and everything is searched for firearms and ammunition.

"Practically the whole of Ireland is under martial law. The curfew tolls at 10:30 p. m. and is kept until 5 a. m.

"Only doctors, firemen and others who have good cause to apply for a permit to be out between given hours can enter the street to brave the challenge that the soldiers hurl at one, which is far too short and often never repeated by word, but by a shot.

"Many an innocent man has been shot dead under such circumstances by the very young soldier that is being used for enforcing the law here. Yes, soldiers far too young and eager to use the gun just because they are entrusted or invested with such power.

"At one end of the city one can see the walls of houses and billboards chalked up with such writings as 'Up Rebels!' 'Up Sinn Fein!' 'Down the Crown!' etc., while at the other end of the city the Union Jack is displayed from almost every house.

"A factional war is ensuing. A member of one faction living in the neighborhood of the other faction will receive a message to move or else the end will be soon, and will quietly and quickly do so, without notifying the military authorities who have placarded the city demanding such notices should be turned over to them at once.

"Many a good old home that some family has occupied for the past thirty or forty years had to be abandoned quickly and sold for nearly nothing, thereby giving up priceless home treasures and family heirlooms. And so many an old Irish heart is broken as well as the home.

"Everything is rather quiet here and everywhere in Ireland just now. But it is a quietness that bears ill boding. An unseen brewing is now taking place. It is the quiet before the outburst.

"Everywhere poverty and dirt and terrible famine prevail; yet, by the clear-cut features of the young folks, the girls' wonderful black hair, clear eyes, very white skin and intelligent expression, the young men's ruddy cheeks, sharp eyes and determined looks, one who appreciates real physical types would marvel at these humans were they transplanted to a troubleless country and clothed in the best.

"They are not, as is common in other countries among the poorer masses, slovenly clothed and of slovenly carriage and expression. The clothing here is of very poor texture, to be sure, but the carriage, expression and determination of each individual is something to marvel at. So the land of the shamrock and the harp is in deep suffering and trouble."

A LOST ILLUSION.

I always meet her on my way
To earn the salary I get;
I used to think of her all day,
But after this I shall forget.
She's pretty; yet if she should die
My gladness wouldn't show a crimp;
Last night I heard her saying I
Was "such a funny-looking simp."

DO IT NOW ESPECIALLY APPLIES TO LOVE

DOM PEDRO of Brazil, when asked why North America was so much more advanced than South America and what was the secret of this state of things, replied: "Manana! (tomorrow!) You North Americans never wait; we always wait."

Over business men's desks I have seen a little card stuck up, on which was printed in big, red letters: "Do It Now."

While these two instances apply to success in business, they are just as applicable to success in the game of life. Put a little heart's ease, a little love, a little rest, a little gladness into This Day!

You may not have another.

Now for a few practical hints on how to do this.

First, remember that the thing most worth while in life, the thing that makes it taste best as we go along and that we most rejoice to remember and least wish to forget when it's all over is—LOVE. So allow no day to pass without expressing love somehow to someone.

It may be a fellow workman you like. Don't postpone handing him a compliment, saying something to him you know will make him feel good. Go out of your way to do something that will warm his heart.

It may be your little girl. You're tired, of course, and worried, and her childish exuberance annoys you. But wait! She is slipping away from you every minute. The time will come soon enough when she will be no longer yours, looking up to you for a drop of gentleness. So, take time. Give her five minutes, anyway, and a hug or two and a warm word from Dad for her to remember.

It may be the little boy. The time's coming when you'll want nothing so badly as that your boy confide in you—and not withdraw himself. Therefore invest now in some kindness and fellowship. Don't put it off.

It may be your wife. Never a woman lived that didn't want attention and flattery and to be prized. No matter how absorbed you are in important business, no matter how great your hurry to get to the lodge or to the meeting, take a few minutes and devote them entirely to the all-important business of making that woman think she is the most interesting and vital affair in the world.

Don't economize in love. It's the one treasure that grows bigger the more you take from it, the one valuable thing in which it pays to be a spendthrift. Give it away, throw it away, splash it over, empty your pockets, and tomorrow you'll have more than ever.

Stars and Stripes

There is many an advanced thinker who has never advanced a thought.

Having tried nearly everything else, perhaps Europe in the near future will decide to go to work.

"The last word in apartments," says an advertisement. Who has the last word in your apartment?

A pastor tells us that salvation is free. He probably says that of salvation because he can't say it of anything else.

There hasn't been a pair of old shoes thrown at a bride and bridegroom in two years. People just hate to take 'em off.

There is one sort of literature that has meat in every line, and that is the butcher's bill.

Speaking of optimists, there is a barber in New York who has rented out his front window to a party who demonstrates safety razors.

Report says very few convicts tried to escape prison during the last fiscal year. They know how hard it is to make a living outside.

A Kansas City mother says the trouble with little girls today is that they wear too many clothes. But, probably, they will get over that when they grow up.
